Patients drugged to save staff?

A factory atmosphere exists in many B.C. long-term care facilities with patients being drugged for the convenience of the staff, says the Hospital Employees Union.

Union secretary-business manager Jack Gerow said today in a news release the overuse of drugs is only one of several complaints employees have about the staffing and care provided in such facilities.

He said the union, snubbed by a government group studying long-term care, will conduct its own probe of the situation.

"Our members have concerns about patient care which we fear will not be addressed by the government study," he said.

He said Assistant Deputy Health Minister Isabel Kelly turned down the union's request to participate in the government's steering committee on long-term care.

The request was denied, he said, despite the fact that the committee was ostensibly set up to include groups with demonstrated interests in the long-term care program.

Gerow said in meetings called to tackle the problem of inadequate staffing and patient care HEU members have deplored what they call the factory atmosphere in many nursing homes and private hospitals.

Some of their complaints include the following:

— Patients being drugged to reduce the need for the staff to spend time with them;

— "Activation programs" which amount to wheeling the patient in front of a television set to sit for hours;

— Dirty patients covered with bedsores;

— Union funds or in some cases employees' own money being used to buy craft supplies or holiday treats for patients because no other funds were available.

"Members are also concerned that staff are too busy to encourage residents to participate in actitivities that are available or to help them to exercise properly to avoid further deterioration of their condition," Gerow said.

He added that while HEU members realize some long-term care facilities are providing decent care, "they feel that there is a vast difference between the intent and the reality of the long-term care program in some nursing homes and private hospitals."

Gerow said the union hopes to have a report prepared for the government in four to six months.

Taxman tackles fishing industry

OTTAWA (CP) — Revenue Minister William Rompkey says his department has started an assessment of the fishing industry on both coasts to see how incomes are earned and spent.

The minister told reporters Wednesday the government obviously will prosecute any tax evaders turned up in the assessment, but officials are not specifically looking for wrongdoing.

The govenment is however concerned at reports of large cash deals, which are made by fishermen at sea and the fact that all of these may not be declared.

Each year the department selected a few industries for assessment and this year was the fishing industry's turn.

The minister said his officials will take a random sampling of individual fishermen and fishing companies, with emphasis on the latter.

The officials will look at records to "see what is happening in terms of taxes."

He added that the fishing industry now is becoming relatively prosperous because of the new 200-mile fishing limit and because of government policies.

"Thank God that fishermen have income on which they can pay taxes," he said.

Revenue officials, with assistance from small business experts, also planned to give some advice to fishermen on their financial operations.

"Fishermen now . . . are small businessmen and they now have to act as small businessmen."

The officials will assess the entire structure of the industry — following the fish from the water to the can.

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — Nothing is sacred these days — including the garbage of this wealthy Vancouver suburb.

Consequently, residents have set up an impromptu Neighborhood Watch to ensure their trash is not stolen.

Residents are participating in an experimental curbside recycling program to convert pre-sorted glass, metals and newspapers into reduced garbage pick-up bills and a longer lifespan for landfill garbage dumps.

But garbage thieves have been ripping off the best of the recyclable items to make a little profit for themselves and more work for police.

The going rates for recycled materals are $35 a short (2,000 pounds) ton for glass; $45 a short ton for metals and $35 a long (2,240 pounds) ton for newspapers.

After explaining the recycling program, Tansley said the man felt badly about his action and put back all the buckets.

The month-old program's apparent success indicates West Vancouver wants to show the way in conservation among B.C. municipalities, said Ald. Don Lanskail, head of the municipal recycling project.

Bruce Culver, president of New Life Recycling which picks up the recyclables, says his large van is filled twice each collection day from the 1,300 homes in the test area.

Culver says his staff has been carefully schooled about being discreet about the neighborhood's drinking habits.

"There's no going down the street shouting: 'Wow, look at all those gin bottles,' " he said.

Mayor overreacted in police dispute

By
LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The Essential Services Disputes Act won't be used to force Saanich police officers back to work as relief dispatchers on the communications desk, assistant deputy labor minister Doug Cameron said today.

Cameron said Saanich Police Board chairman Mayor Mel Couvelier overreacted Wednesday when he requested the provincial cabinet invoke a section of the act.

He said Couvelier should not have asked cabinet to order police officers to relieve civilian communications staff.

"I think the escalation of the issue to the ESDA is extending it beyond the bounds of its perimeter," Cameron said.

Couvelier's request indicates he misunderstands a collective agreement in effect between the police board and the Saanich Police Association, he said.

The agreement is in full force and there is no prospect of a strike or lockout by the union.

Meanwhile, Couvelier announced at noon today he has sent a telegram to the Labor Relations Board office in Vancouver requesting a hearing Friday morning in Victoria on the communications manning issue.

An internal dispute between the board and the union worsened Wednes- when the association announced police officers will no longer cover for civilian staff away due to illness or during lunch and coffee breaks.

Cameron said the dispute should be dealt with by the LRB or by an arbitrator under the terms of an existing collective agreement.

"The matter is before the LRB as I understand it and that's the appropriate arena in my view.

"The matter is capable of being resolved in the framework of their collective agreement or under the labor code of B.C.," Cameron said.

Couvelier wrote the letter after all 40 police officers on duty walked off the job for an hour at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

The officers said they were protesting the police board's refusal to meet with them or appoint an arbitrator to settle several long-standing grievances.

The unresolved dispute between the police association and the police board creates a "serious danger to life, health and safety of the community . . ." Couvelier says in the letter.

Cameron said he hasn't studied the Saanich letter yet but is aware of the contents.

As of 7 a.m. Wednesday police officers stopped relieving civilian staff working in the communications centre.

The civilian employees are members of the Canadian Union of Public Employers.

Police association president Sgt. Phil Jamieson said the LRB ruled in March police officers are not required to supply officers to relieve communiciations personnel.

An officer on the communications desk means one less officer in the field, he said.

The police board has ordered the association to supply relief officers and Couvelier says the board will try to enforce the order.

Bank rate dips again

OTTAWA (CP) — The Bank of Canada rate dropped today to 11.29 per cent from 11.81 per cent last week, a sign that interest rates will again decline in Canada.

Chartered banks and other financial institutions are expected to follow the central bank's lead.

Despite the cut in the bank rate, economists believe the central bank still seems intent on slowing the decline in interest rates in Canada.

Blackout hits all of lower island

An equipment malfunction at B.C. Hydro's Arnott substation in Surrey caused the lights to go out all over lower Vancouver Island this morning.

The substation is the main Hydro link between the Mainland and Vancouver Island.

A spokesman said a separate circuit is out of service for maintenance so there was no standby circuit available when the main circuit went.

When there is a heavy loss of power on the grid, a Hydro spokesman explained, power is cut off on a "load-shed basis."

This means that larger electrical equipment such as grinders at pulp mills, some as far north as Crofton and Alberni, went out first.

The outage turned into a general blackout all over the lower Island, including parts of Nanaimo.

Dogfight for power on Japan PM's bier

Times News Services

TOKYO — With only 10 days to go before parliamentary elections, the death of Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira Wednesday set the stage for a fierce political power struggle.

The elections were called after the 70-year-old Ohira's surprise loss of a confidence vote in parliament on May 16, when 56 members of his own Liberal Democratic party abstained, giving the Socialist party opposition the victory.

Under Japanese law, Chief Cabinet Secretary Masayoshi Ito became acting prime minister. He will serve in a caretaker capacity until the new Diet, or parliament, is chosen in previously scheduled elections June 22. The new members of the two-house legislature will then choose a new prime minister.

Sending stocks plummeting on the Tokyo stock market, Ohira's death from a heart attack came as the Liberal Democrats, a conservative coalition that has dominated Japan's post-war politics, was torn by internal dissent with numerous party members eyeing Ohira's party leadership post.

The late prime minister will perhaps be remembered most as the man who engineered Japan's diplomatic reconciliation with China in 1972, which resulted in an economic boom for both countries.

He also was considered one of the best friends the United States had in Asia, and his death on the eve of the Big Seven summit of

Curb 'buy U.S.' laws: envoy

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. is inviting retaliation by failing to curb the growing number of states passing "buy American" laws that discriminate against Canadian-exported steel and other products, Peter Towe, the Canadian ambassador to Washington, warned Wednesday.

In an address prepared for delivery to a Pittsburgh audience, Towe said he is worried by a growth of protectionist pressures in both countries that he said will get worse if the economies slip deeper into recession.

Noting Pittsburgh's prominence as a steelmaking city, Towe also tried to head off threats by giant U.S. Steel Corp. to file dumping or countervailing duty actions against the Canadian steel industry that might result in heavy fines for the Canadians if convicted.

Any such action would be nothing more than "harassment and protectionism" aimed against Canada, the ambassador said.

"It would be especially galling for Canada because, while our steel firms have enjoyed success in the U.S. market, Canada-U.S. trade in steel and steel products is still massively in the United States' favor," he added before an audience of rotary club members and the World Affairs Council.

Towe expressed frustration about "buy American" legislation at the federal level and in effect, or soon to be in effect, in 16 states to establish a preference for U.S. steel products and impinge on Canadian steel exports.

Towe conceded there are also regulations in Canada, although not laws, that favor made-in-Canada goods in government procurement policies. But they are less restrictive than in the United States.

Citing government statistics, the ambassador said between 1976 and 1979, about 20 per cent of total purchases by Canadian federal and provincial governments were imports, mostly American goods. By contrast, less than 10 per cent of purchases by the six major U.S. federal agencies in charge of procurement is open to foreign suppliers, he said.

Ohira with Trudeau last month

Ohira was admitted to hospital nearly two weeks ago for fatigue and a mild heart attack suffered at the end of a marathon foreign tour that took him to the United States, Mexico, Canada and finally to Yugoslavia for the funeral last month of Yugoslav President Tito. Aides said Ohira had spent 70 straight days either working or travelling before he entered the hospital May 31.

Ohira has been in trouble since his party lost ground in parliamentary elections last October. He had called the elections, expressing confidence of increasing the party's slim margin in the 511-seat lower house of parliament. The plan backfired, leaving the party with 257 seats in the lower house, a one-seat majority.

Several party leaders, including Ohira's predecessor and arch political rival, former prime minister Takeo Fukuda, had urged Ohira to step aside after the October ballot. Ohira, who unseated Fukuda in a bitter party leadership struggle in 1978, rejected the demands for his resignation. Fukuda was among those who abstained in last month's key nonconfidence vote that brought down the Ohira government.

It was not immediately clear who will succeed Ohira as prime minister and party chief.

Among the leading candidates are Toshio Komoto, a 68-year-old shipping magnate turned politician who heads the "new generation" conservative wing of the party; Yasuhiro Nakasone, 62, a Second World War naval officer and former Tokyo police superintendent who served 14 terms in parliament; and Kiichi Miyazawa, 60, former foreign minister and heir apparent in Ohira's wing of the party.

Ohira's son-in-law, Hajime Morita, who had served as his private secretary, was named to run for the seat the prime minister had held in the lower house of parliament.

Last-ditch rail bid by Phillips

Provincial Industry Minister Don Phillips is in Ottawa today in a last-ditch effort to negotiate a railroad deal with Ottawa in connection with a massive development of B.C. coal.

Japan has agreed to buy the coal if an agreement can be reached by June 15.

The issue is the funding of a 115-kilometre rail spur line from the Sukunka coal fields in northeastern B.C. to the existing main line of the B.C. Railway.

The new railway, known as the Anzac spur, could cost more than $300 million, according to federal government figures.

Ottawa has agreed to help but wants a maximum placed on its contribution.

It wants the B.C. government to agree to pay any construction overruns.

B.C. is still considering that proposal but Phillips has pointed out the province already faces large costs for highways in connection with the development.

The Anzac Spur would be constructed by the CNR, according to the latest proposal.

Earlier, Ottawa had offered only $70 million for the rail project.

Revised cost figures are expected to be available at today's meeting in hopes of getting a fixed price tag for the venture.

Even if approval is reached by the June 15 deadline, the first coal would not reach Japan before 1985 because of the time needed for construction. It would be delivered through Prince Rupert.

At 91 he still hopes to find a bear to bop

VANCOUVER (CP) — Richard St. Barbe Baker came to Canada in 1910 to fulfill his dream of killing a bear by hitting it over the head with a spade.

Although the 91-year-old English-born forester hasn't found the right bear — and he may yet — he's had more adventures in one lifetime than most men could fit into 50 lives.

Baker's interest in Canada was first aroused at age 10 when his great uncle lived in Guelph, Ont.

"He wrote letters back home which were read to me and I'd always prick up my ears at the spicy bits about bears," Baker said in an interview.

One anecdote was about a man who killed a bear by hitting it over the head with a spade. Baker, then a young English schoolboy, determined to do the same thing himself.

When he first came to Canada, Baker worked his way through university in Saskatchewan writing sports for a local newspaper.

Eventually he returned to England where he earned a diploma in forestry from Cambridge University in 1919. Since then, Baker's life has been devoted to trees.

He was assistant forests conservator in Kenya and Nigeria and he founded an international organization called Men of the Trees.

Before the Second World War Baker, who now lives in New Zealand, became deeply involved in a campaign to save California's huge redwood trees.

His adventures include touring the forests of the U.S. and preparing plans for former president Franklin Roosevelt which later were incorporated into the Civilian Conservation Corps and provided forestry jobs for nearly six million men.

At age 64, Baker learned to fly, then flew to Moscow for conferences with Soviet scientists on tree-growing in desert regions.

Meanwhile he hopes to finish the book he's been working on for the last three years and he says he'll do his best to find that bear that's waiting to be bashed over the head.

Corporate profits skyrocket

TORONTO (CP) — Corporate profits rose by more than 50 per cent in the first quarter of 1980, compared with the same period last year, a survey by The Globe and Mail indicates.

It is the largest increase in quarterly profits since the fourth quarter of 1973.

The profit rise is much higher than expected by most economists, apparently reflecting a delay in the start of the U.S. recession.

Profits in the first quarter of this year for the companies surveyed were $3.003 billion, up from $1.997 in the first quarter of 1979.

Murder victim molested

DUNCAN — RCMP Wednesday revealed Suzanna Seto, a Vancouver real estate appraiser, was sexually molested before she was murdered in her hotel room in the early hours of June 3.

The nude body of the 29-year-old woman was recovered by RCMP in a bush area adjacent to Village Green Inn, which is near the Cowichan River.

So far as is known, there was a disturbance in Seto's hotel room early on June 3, but no guest who heard it reported it or investigated.

It wasn't until 3 p.m. the same day that hotel management called police.

Although the hotel cleaning staff had cleaned the room, investigators found blood on the carpet, as well as a broken chain necklace and broken eyeglasses.

Police are now convinced Seto was murdered in her room by a blow to the head and then dragged through a sliding glass doorway to a grass courtyard area at the rear of the hotel.

Three hours after being called, RCMP discovered Seto's body in the bush.

A missing attache case and purse were located in the Cowichan River two days after the murder.

Shellfish ban extended

VANCOUVER (CP) — Harvesting of shellfish has been banned from Sechelt near Vancouver to Westview, north of Powell River, becauses of paralytic shellfish poisoning.

The ban applies only to clams, oysters and mussels.

The latest closure extends the ban to most of the B.C. coast, he said.

Another band of high clouds was pushing into the province from the south early today. The southerly flow is the result of the persistence of a weakening low pressure system off the Washington coast. Temperatures were back to near-normal Wednesday after the cool spell of the last two weeks and should be near the same today. Variable cloudiness will continue for a few more days as the low continues to weaken and drift eastward.

'Trendy' prostitution creating a crisis: Vancouver MP

OTTAWA (CP) — Prostitution in Vancouver's west end has reached crisis proportions and is encouraging juveniles to believe that prostitution is trendy and well-paying, Progressive Conservative MP Pat Carney told the Commons Wednesday.

MPs would not, however, give unanimous support to her motion calling on the federal government to give local police more authority to deal with the problem.

Ms. Carney said outside the Commons she is determined to have something done about uncontrolled prostitution and has also written a letter to Justice Minister Jean Chretien outlining what she says are some of its seedier aspects.

"The traffic in human flesh which occurs daily in the west end has become a tourist attraction with sightseers jamming the streets and sidewalks to view the spectacle," the letter says.

One innocent bystander was allegedly knifed by prostitutes who thought the woman had invaded their territory.

Apartment dwellers in the area were "incensed at having their sleep disturbed by obscene exchanges between prostitutes and pimps, squealing tires and loud verbal harassment."

In addition to the impact on juveniles, children attending a day-care centre in the area were exposed to prostitutes plying their trade in front of the building.

Other prostitutes plied their trade from the front yard and church hall of a local Anglican church.

Ms. Carney says says she is impatient with the argument that legislation would interfere with human rights.

"Human rights are already being violated by the need for city police to stop area residents going about their routine tasks in order to determine the nature of their business."

She said she is "not proposing any measures so harsh as to deny civil rights to anyone. I feel that the rights of West End citizens to live in peace have been seriously eroded and that juveniles are being enticed into activities which they will regret."

Ms. Carney's motion comes one day after Vancouver police told of women being auctioned like cattle to work as prostitutes on city streets. Depending on earning power, the price would be anywhere between $300 and $1,000.

The sellers are said to be pimps who no longer want the prostitute.

The yawning ritual

OTTAWA — The tourists, looking upward for signs of the snowflakes that the weather forecasts warn them about, are lined up outside Parliament as if at Radio City Music Hall.

Lorne Nystrom, his Saskatchewan Afro curls tight on his head, rises under Standing Order 43 on "a matter of urgent and pressing necessity." The Liberal government, with just five ministers in the front bench, does not consider Mr. Nystrom's agitation urgent.

Mel Gass from Prince Edward Island, his moustache quivering with indignation, rises on his matter of "urgent and pressing necessity," it being that PEI "is fast becoming the tuna capital of the world" and there are problems attached.

Mr. Trudeau, shielded against the June blizzards by his favorite fawn corduroy suit, sits reading through his Ben Frankllin glasses, both he and his rose oblivious to the storm of urgent and pressing matters rising all around him.

Mike Landers, a Liberal from Saint-John, finds it urgent that Air Canada should be selling just "one ticket, one person." This brings a beaming smile to the visage of Steve Paproski, the Edmonton Tory, who is comfortable only with three seats to accomodate his voluminous backside.

Pat Carney, the stately lady from Vancouver Centre, the hooker capital of British Columbia, and undoubtedly the Dominion, invokes Standing Order 43 in attempts to get the government to move on prostitution, which, in her riding, encourages teen-agers to think of it as a "trendy activity." The government yawns.

Walter Dinsdale of Brandon-Souris is working himself into contrived concern over the failure of Western Pacific Airlines to serve the 180,000 people who live in western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan properly. "Meaning," says the resident sardonic wit in the press gallery, " it's a boring drive for Walter from Winnipeg to Brandon."

Polar bears are the urgent and pressing necessity of Bill Domm, the Tory from Peterborough, because the Soviet Union and Norway have banned hunting polar bears for sport but Canada has merely put a quota on the number of polar bears shot by grown men who get their kicks this way.

The Rev. Roland de Corneille, the Liberal from polar bear-deprived Toronto, claps his hands in applause. His colleagues veto Mr. Domm's pressing necessity, since polar bears have no votes.

Charles Mayer of Portage-Marquette is after Transport Minister Jean-Luc Pepin for not having someone in Brussels May 17 to find out why farmers have lost 75 cents a bushel and Mr. Pepin, responding to a heckle from a subdued Joe Clark, says, "Thank you very much, the Leader of the Opposition, for your advice."

Madame Speaker draws to the attention of the boys the presence in the gallery of that household name from governmental concerns in the Isle of Man, Clifford Irving.

"Is that he guy who wrote the hoax book on Howard Hughes?" the press gallery wit asks. "No," someone replies, "he's the one who cuts the tails off all the cats."

Bob Rae, the aristocratic socialist from Toronto, is onto the Liberals for all the layoffs at the Iron Ore of Canada plant in Quebec, his mischievous motives undoubtedly being aimed at the Tories instead, since a chap called Brian Mulroney (still lurking in the leadership closet) happens to be the president of Iron Ore of Canada and will be in some discomfiture.

Patrick Nowlan, the large Tory from Nova Scotia, can't stand the "noxious notion" of the Liberal blended price on oil, which always reminds one of Jello pudding mix, that being the best way to describe the Liberal election platform.

Madame Speaker displays the usual Liberal knowledge of Western Canada by introducing, from the gallery, Education Minister Brian Smith "of Alberta." Since Mr. Smith lives in Victoria, they've either moved the town or western solidarity has gone further than we think.

It is 3:04, with Tory Girve Fretz from Erie up on his hind legs attempting to question the prime minister of all Canada, when the prime minister gathers his papers and his rose and walks out.

One can hardly blame him.

It's 15 minutes, court rules

OTTAWA (CP) — Vancouver lawyer Arthur Vertlieb tried unsuccessfully Wednesday to convince the Supreme Court of Canada that the time span between 3 a.m. and 3:15 a.m. was not 15 minutes in legal terms.

The seven learned justices didn't buy his arguments and upheld a conviction of driving with too much alcohol in her blood against Vancouver bank clerk Dale Perry.

Ms. Perry was given two breath tests the morning of March 22, 1977, one of them at 3 a.m. and the other at 3:15 a.m. Under the Criminal Code there must be a time interval of at least 15 minutes between the tests.

Vertlieb won an acquittal in Provincial Court for his client on the grounds that in computing time under the law, the first day or the first minute doesn't count nor do the last.

Under that interpretation, only 13 minutes elapsed between tests.

Mr. Justice Julien Chouinard at one point invited Vertlieb "to use your watch or use your fingers" to compute the 15 minutes.

He said a person reaching his 40th birthday was actually in his 41st year. In this case the second test was taken in the 16th minute.

Lawyer, ex-wife remanded in theft

VANCOUVER (CP) — A former Vancouver lawyer and his ex-wife brought back from Hong Kong to face theft charges were released on bail Wednesday after they appeared in provincial court.

Judge Gordon Johnson set bail at $15,000 for lawyer William Fan, 38, and at $10,000 for his former wife, Catherine, 28. He remanded them to Monday to set a trial date.

The two are charged with stealing $185,000 in gold bars, jade and diamond jewelry from Tsoi Mei Ling between June 1 and Aug. 31, 1976, from a Vancouver bank safety deposit box.

The best offer yet

Sam Bawlf has made the best offer yet in the ongoing convention centre controversy.

If Bawlf, tourist officials, the city and possibly the Provincial Capital Commission, can find a suitable site for his private convention centre development, they will accomplish several things.

First, they will save the taxpayers of Victoria and B.C. untold millions of dollars. Bawlf says that no public money is necessary for the development he has in mind; it would be self-supporting. The current centre involves at least $8 million in capital costs plus operating losses that may easily reach $500,000 a year, all to be paid from the public purse.

Second, the sensitive harborfront site now slated for the centre would be preserved. This would reduce greatly the controversy over the centre, leaving the city and the PCC free to find a more appropriate use for the site. Although Bawlf says he still personally likes the waterfront site, neither he nor anyone else has yet satisfactorily explained why convention delegates need a choice view lot for their meeting rooms.

Third, Bawlf's proposed complex might be more successful in attracting conventions than the venture currently in the works. Many delegates consider it a definite asset to walk easily from hotel room to meeting room in the same building. At present, the Empress is the only hotel with a room big enough to accommodate a very large meeting.

Some conditions would have to be met before Bawlf's proposal could receive approval.

A major concern would be the hotel's location. The site would have to be suitable for that use and not conflict with over-all city planning. The hotel would also have to comply with existing design and height limits. A highrise towering in the midst of lower buildings would probably not be acceptable, for example.

Bawlf would also have to provide facilities that would meet the needs of conventions likely to come here. Officials of the tourism ministry and local tourist agencies could describe these requirements.

The third proviso Bawlf made himself. If Crown land is involved in the package, the right to develop should not be automatically awarded to the former minister. Bawlf has already said he would be glad to enter an open competition.

City council and the minister in charge of the Provincial Capital Commission Hugh Curtis should greet Bawlf's suggestion with enthusiasm. Certainly they should all discuss it with him before taking another step towards building the harborfront centre with public money.

Salt air factor

Is it the heady mountain-sea air of the west coast? Something must account for the transformation in Premier Bennett's attitude this week.

Before the constitutional conference in Ottawa, the the tough-talking premier was insinuating that either Ottawa come around to the west's view on energy issues or there would be a contest between him and Peter Lougheed over who would pull the first plug on constitutional reform.

At the conference however, Bennett was regarded as one of the more cooperative premiers. He agreed that give and take was necessary, and said he felt a greater understanding for the aspirations of other regions of Canada and the federal government. No ultimatums or non-negotiable items were presented. He was a model of tact and diplomacy.

Then he returned from Ottawa and the salt air hit his nostrils. A federal tax on exported natural gas, he declared, could result in "a major constitutional blow-up."

(Energy Minister Marc Lalonde has indicated a natural gas export tax is possible as one means of bolstering Ottawa's impoverished coffers. Bennett contends control of natural gas lies entirely in the province's domain.)

Referring to Prime Minister Trudeau's observation that there would be a constitutional crisis if agreement weren't reached in September, Bennett said "there is more possibility of a constitutional crisis if there is a tax on natural gas exports."

The fact is, that regardless of how it is done, B.C. taxpayers will inevitably have to pay their share of the national debt. For a great many residents, it would be much less painful to have their share come from a surcharge on exported natural gas than from, say, an increase in income tax. Fighting with Ottawa over the way we must ante up is no reason to jeopardize constitutional reform.

JAMES RESTON

Making news but no sense

WASHINGTON — All mathematicians and most politicians have counted Senator Kennedy out, so what keeps him in the presidential race? What makes Teddy run? You have to live in this goofy town in order to understand that this is essentially a psychological question.

Nobody believes in logic around here, and almost everybody believes in the accidents of politics. From Warren Harding to Jimmy Carter, all sorts of unlikely characters have stumbled into the White House, so Kennedy soldiers on.

He has some arguments for doing so, none of them very persuasive. The press is unanimous in proclaiming now that he cannot possibly win the Democratic nomination, just as they were almost unanimous last year in thinking that he couldn't possibly lose. You can't blame him therefore, for thinking they might just be wrong again, but it's probably a bum guess.

Obligations

Also, Kennedy has some promises to keep. A lot of influential Democrats urged him to run on the ground that he had an obligation to defend the liberal policies of the Democratic Party which, they insisted, Carter had abandoned.

Therefore, it is argued, that since so many people stuck with him through the primary elections, he should stick with them through the Madison Square Garden convention in August. There is something to this argument, but not much.

Finally, it is contended that by staying in the race, he will be able to persuade Carter to accept a more liberal party platform, but this assumes that Jimmy Carter takes the liberal platform rhetoric seriously, which, judging by the last liberal Democratic platform Carter embraced in 1976, is a dubious proposition.

Why then does he keep going? The guess here is that he does so for several reasons. He believes Carter's economic policies have been a disaster, and that Carter's foreign policies have confused the Allies, the Communists, and the contending forces in the Middle East. There is no evidence that he has any answer to these tangles at home or abroad, but he is confident that, better than Carter, he can recruit a team that can find the answers.

That is his fantasy, but while he may hear "Hail to the Chief" in the night, he is a practical politician and knows the numbers are against him and that Carter will be nominated in August. Yet he is trying, or so it seems here, to prove something about himself and to the nation.

His personal character has been attacked. He has been condemned as a man who "panics" and even runs away under pressure. He started his campaign very badly, and was mocked for his early failures, but he rallied to the attack, finished the primaries very well by defeating the president in California and New Jersey, and has therefore been encouraged to carry his fight against Carter and Carter's policies into the Democratic nominating convention in Madison Square Garden.

EDWARD KENNEDY
. . . splitting the party

He has a fundamental difference with Carter about the economy, about the budget, and particularly about the welfare and the health of the poor people of this country. He has no coherent policy to reconcile his yearnings with his policies, but he's sure he's right and that Carter is wrong, and he clearly resents Carter's efforts to destroy him by oblique references to Kennedy's tragedy at Chappaquiddick.

But even so, this is no excuse for carrying on his campaign against Carter. He cannot possibly win the nomination without destroying the president, dividing his party, and in the process electing Reagan, which he clearly does not want to do, but may do by accident.

It's a long time before the Democratic nominating convention next August. A campaign by Kennedy, attacking Carter's record, is precisely what the Republicans want in the next few months, along with the help of John Anderson, who will take more votes away from Carter than from Reagan.

And if, by chance, Kennedy managed to destroy Carter, it is highly unlikely that the Democrats would turn to him, but more than likely to Vice President Mondale, with Secretary of State Muskie as his running mate.

Finally, if Kennedy goes on and loses to Carter but divides the Democratic Party, he will not only fail in this election, but create such hostility among the Democrats that he will ruin his chances for his party's presidential nomination in 1984.

In the end, Kennedy is not likely to carry his battle that far. He is a party man — bred in the Democratic tradition of Massachusetts loyalty. He may defy Carter for a while, but he is not likely to defy Tip O'Neill, the Speaker of the House, who is urging party unity to defeat Reagan in November.

Long career

Kennedy is still a comparatively young man in his late forties. He has won the confidence of the Senate, if not of the country. He is chairman of the influential Senate Judiciary Committee and has a long political career ahead of him, regardless of what happens in this election.

After a stumbling run at the presidency early on, he has waged a gallant campaign, under severe pressure for himself and his family, but he had a fair shot at the nomination and he has lost. Carrying on from here may make news but won't make sense, for it will hurt his party, help Reagan, and reduce whatever chances he has to seek the presidency next time.

Tell the minister

On May 8, in the House of Commons, I had the opportunity to question the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Romeo LeBlanc, on West Coast fishery policies.

The question of "whether (Mr. LeBlanc) intends to proceed with the plan formulated by his officials to institute an 18-inch limit on Chinook salmon caught by sports fishermen off the west coast," received a vague non-answer. Mr. LeBlanc is "studying . . . the proposals aimed at improving fisheries management, sports fishing particularly, to apply better conservation policies. (He is) not now in a position to announce specific decisions in that regard."

On the question of instituting a licensing system for sports fishermen, or, the requested assurance that the minister has no plans for increasing the commercial licenses on the West coast for 1980 or 1981, Mr. LeBlanc was much more conciliatory. Discussions with the Advisory Council, created by former minister James McGrath, led the minister "to believe that it would be very useful to have a further exchange in June." Romeo LeBlanc intends on spending "a fair amount of time on the west coast in the middle of June to put forward proposals and to hear the reactions before a decision is made."

I urge all interested parties to engage the minister and his advisors, on their West Coast fact-finding tour, to insure that your opinion is voiced first hand. My representations in the House of Commons and my recommendations at the committee level, all too often fall on ears of clay. — Donald Munro, MP, Esquimalt-Saanich.

Fight apathy

Recently during the night some brave soul slipped a note through the door. It read precisely as follows, including the punctuation: "Anderson Have you nothing better to do than get your name in paper. Why dont you Shut up. twice now you criticised"

There may be others who feel as he does but I hope not too many. After all it is a requirement of the Times that names and addresses be given, which is a good rule, for it can be a bit cowardly to send unsigned letters or hide behind nom de plumes just as it is criminal to use someone else's name.

To-day's great enemy is apathy, the feeling that inflation is natural, unemployment inevitable and that the present international situation cannot be altered. At my age publicity has no attractions but I am greatly concerned about the state of the nation and the world. It is probably one of the most dangerous periods so far and while I do not ask anyone to accept my point of view I do plead with them to examine each problem with care and form their own. — F. L. P. Anderson, 409-2174 Cadboro Bay Road.

Let CN do it

Don Phillips, B.C.'s Industry and Trade Minister, did the right thing when he asked the CNR to take on the job of moving northeast coal to the coast. B.C. Rail could have done the job. But a national carrier with the CN's reputation for sound management will be proof positive that our taxpayers aren't subsidizing coal exports to Japan in the '80s.

The CNR's practice, ever since World War II, has been "user pay" insofar as raw material movements are concerned. The foreign buyer, in other words, must pay all costs — labor, equipment and fuel included. Long term contracts, assured tonnages and all up compensatory rates are typical of the transportation package which the CN has negotiated from one end of the country to the other. So why not use the CN? Why not make foreign companies pay all our transportation costs and then some?

There are other aspects. One is that the CNR may choose the shorter, easier Monkman Pass route to B.C.'s rich Peace River coal fields. Two is continuity of supply. B.C. Rail has a poor record insofar as strikes are concerned. The CN has a good one. B.C. Rail has been declared technically bankrupt by B.C.'s new auditor-general. The CNR operates in the black. Foreign purchasers are aware of these facts. They are more likely to be willing buyers if the CNR hauls our coal all the way to Prince Rupert.

To do so makes a lot of sense from a business point of view. Let us hope that Ottawa will see it that way too. — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

Look at Ontario

It is an astonishing commentary on how fragmented our country still is, that recent nationally disruptive policies of the Bill Davis government in Ontario should have received so little coverage in the West. Two recent absurdities illustrate the point: the French language school question in Penetanguishene and the banning of the great German film, The Tin Drum.

In the first instance, Davis and Company played for over two years to their most red-necked supporters in refusing the very legitimate need for a French high school in that area of Ontario. Almost daily, the press in Quebec featured the sordid manoeuvrings of Davis and his Minister of Education, Bette Stephenson. Finally, they caved in; a school will be built but only after great damage had been done to the federalist cause.

In the second case, all of Canada has again been held up to ridicule and scorn all over the Western World. And once more, by banning such an important and internationally acclaimed film as The Tin Drum, the Ontario Tories are playing to their most ignorant and unenlightened small town supporters.

The point to make then is that the media in B.C., both electronic and print, should pay more attention to the manipulations of the government of our largest province. If Confederation is sold down the river, Bill Davis and Company will own most of the bill of sale. — James N. Knechtel, 2067 Lorne Terrace.

Police merger

The police department of the City of Westmount — which is a city within a city — was a model of efficiency providing the citizens with first rate protection.

Then came the decision to amalgamate all the police departments of the greater Montreal area. Down went Westmount's standard of protection and up went the cost.

While there may have been factors involved in the Westmount experience which might not be encountered in Victoria, in considering the B.C. Police Commission's recommendation to amalgamate the police forces in Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt, Oak Bay and Central Saanich the mayors of these municipalities would do well to keep the City of Westmount's experience in mind. — Charles Hutchins, 2068 Esplanade Road.

All the living

In answer to L. Blackstock's letter (Help the living) — he wonders if the Pro-Life people would be of more benefit helping those children alive and suffering in today's world. Why does he assume they aren't helping in that area as well, collectively or individually?

I am a single parent of three children, belong to, and uphold Pro-Life and its beliefs, while also supporting a foster child (alive, but under-privileged) in Java, and have done so for three years.

The "unborn children" he speaks of are also alive, and depend largely upon us for their birth and survival. — Margaret Hale, 22 Hayward Heights.

Clean the stable

If a conference centre project was important before this latest community embarrassment, it is doubly important now; in reality the image, stature, integrity and competence of the whole business community is on the line.

Open, responsible and accountable leadership is required if public funds in the millions are to be used and the clouds of skepticism blown away.

First, the mayor of the city should urge that a new site be chosen. The present vacant provincially owned block bounded by Blanshard, Burdett, Humbolt and Penwell streets would be excellent. Blanshard is now the main roadway into the city, the site has excellent access on all sides and is close to major hotels.

Secondly, the mayor and council should appoint a small task force of community leaders with proven financial competence to review the present financial projections, capital requirements, revenue and expense forecast, losses anticipated and financial commitments from the province.

Thirdly, projected losses should be thoroughly and publicly weighed against thoroughly substantiated benefits by the task force.

Fourthly, the current hotel room tax should be used to cover any anticipated losses together with, if deemed feasible, the introduction of an amusement tax. (No further tax load should be placed on property.)

Fifthly, and simultaneously, architectural, conceptual drawings should be made up for public scrutiny together with impact studies on traffic and transportation.

Again, if the whole concept was important to the community, it is even more important now. Cleaning out the stable never hurts the horses. Let's get on with it in a fresh, open and intelligent manner. — Peter Pollen, 3470 Upper Terrace.

Abortion project muddled

THE SUN
An Editorial

Health Minister Rafe Mair has added a new semantic twist to the tortured language of the province's ongoing debate on abortion. He has announced a pilot project designed to reduce the number of abortions being performed in B.C.

The project will involve education and counselling of young people and will be carried out in an Interior community. The minister has said Birthright, a group that counsels pregnant women against having abortions, may be a participant in the project.

The language of Mr. Mair's announcement gives us pause. Could he not have taken a more positive tack and announced a program of birth control selling, of prevention of pregnancy, so that the question of whether a woman has an abortion is the secondary consideration of his campaign?

The province does not need a program oriented toward the Birthright method of counselling women after they become pregnant with an unwanted child. It needs to tackle the problem before the pregnancy occurs and it needs counselling with no specific bias about what choices an individual woman should make about her pregnancy.

Possibly that is what Mr. Mair intends with his new program — details are yet to be announced — but his rhetoric so far has been negative: to reduce the number of abortions.

Mr. Mair seems unable to acknowledge that the aim of groups that support the right of women to choose abortion is also to reduce the number of abortions being performed. The aim of those groups is to encourage the use of birth control, where an adequate method can be provided for an individual woman; to tackle the problem at its beginning, rather than somewhere in the middle.

While we would be delighted to think that Mr. Mair intends to start his battle at square one, too, it is difficult to have faith in that. He has ignored a request from Planned Parenthood Association for funding an education program.

Like the pro-life groups who support him, Mr. Mair seems to be making the mistake of seeing abortion strictly as a moral problem when it is as much an economic one.

Women with a reasonable degree of wealth have almost always been able to obtain abortions, either inside or outside the law. Those women have been able to travel to countries where therapeutic abortions are available or they have used the best illegal abortion services within Canada. It is poor women who are in real danger of being driven to the worst of desperate measures, and of dying as a result.

Crime capital of the U.S.?

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

The brain is an endless source of amusement for the world's scientists. They poke the left hemisphere and jolt the right, taking bets on whether it will think lewd thoughts or attack the brain in the next beaker. In 1977 we received a report from London, squeezed into a tantalizing sentence, that "two professors who examined 397 post-mortem records in a London hospital have found that human brains are getting bigger." We can't imagine who was more excited: hatters, or scientists who realized they now had more to play with.

The latest intelligence on the subject, courtesy of The Sunday Times, comes from Tohoku National University in Japan, where a team of doctors has been measuring the brain volumes of 1,000 people and chatting about the results. Professor Taiju Matsuzawa, leader of the project, was particularly concerned that otherwise healthy farmers in the northern reaches of Japan were losing their "human fibre" at an early age, and lapsing into senility. The problem, he concluded, is that they don't think enough, or often enough, or something.

While the article was vague on the subject of what constitutes thought, it suggested that the rear section of the brain spends its time thinking about sex, food and breathing, not necessarily in that order (although we sometimes wonder), while the front and side sections of the brain mull over the more intellectual and emotional issues. These last sections, says Prof. Matsuzawa, will deteriorate with age unless blood (and oxygen) circulates freely through the head. "The best way to maintain good blood circulation is through using the brain," he advises. "Think hard, and engage in conversation." It's discouraging to consider that the ones who never stop talking will outlast the rest of us.

The enemy of the brain is routine. You can't fool the cells by thinking the same thoughts over and over again, because, like the people who have to listen to you, they get bored, and start dying off once you reach 30. Lawyers (of all people) stand the best chance of making it through to 60 or 70 unscathed, possibly because of the mental gymnastics involved in justifying their bills. University professors came second. (No surprise here; once they get tenure, even the brain cells refuse to leave.) Politicians and journalists weren't included in the study, perhaps because the team couldn't find enough material to work with.

Contraction of the brain, Prof. Matsuzawa adds, begins sooner in people in the country than in the cities. That may explain why so many country people move to the city.

White-collar crime

By CHARLES CARNEY
The Los Angeles Times

Question: At what location do you find the highest crime rate in the United States?

Answer: The Capitol Building in Washington, D.C.

"The highest crime rate in the nation is in Congress," said Gilbert Geis, a 55-year-old professor of social ecology at the Irvine campus of the University of California, who testified last February before a congressional subcommittee on crime.

"Calculate the number of congressmen arrested or sent to jail and you'll find the percentage is higher than in New York City. It's a lovely statement, one I really like."

Geis likes it because it supports his argument that America's view of what constitutes "serious" crime is cockeyed. Americans tabulate and worry about crime in the streets and send their law enforcement troops there when the real threat both to individuals and society is from "respectable" criminals.

Murder? It is possible, although very difficult to determine, that more Americans are killed by corporations manufacturing dangerous products and causing pollution than by "the more traditional kinds of murder," Geis said. "Unnecesary surgery? That's assault, sometimes murder."

Theft? High-level cheating on income tax, ultimately forcing lower-income taxpayers to pay more, "probably amounts to more money than all the burglaries and robberies put together."

Under the American doctrine that punishment should fit the crime, these sorts of crimes should be the most severely punished, Geis said. Instead, penalties for so-called white-collar criminals are "laughable."

Geis cited the case of a seller of illegal arms who was ordered as his punishment to donate $510,000 to charity. He did so, used the donation as a tax deduction and reaped considerable good will for his "benevolence."

In truth, the punishments America vainly uses to deter its street criminals would be very effective on white-collar criminals. Imprisonment seems little more than an inconvenience to a toughened street criminal, but to the president of a polluting corporation, it would be catastrophe.

"Toughness is not the key issue, but the certainty of punishment is," said Geis. Yet, as things stand now, the certainty is that "the vast amount of criminal activity by upper-class persons" will be "largely ignored." Prosecutors tend to be satisfied by merely exposing the offender publicly and exacting a petty fine or promise of future good conduct.

And that, Geis argues, may establish a link between "suite crime" and street crime. It gives white-collar crime an unofficial blessing, a status of being only slightly more than naughty. It gives encouragement to the overall view that if you are caught, you might be able to work something out.

Geis was recently given the university's 1981 Distinguished Faculty Lectureship Award. His studies in criminology have produced nine books either written or edited by him, plus 220 articles and book chapters. He has lectured or served as a criminology adviser in several countries.

He has for the past year been immersed in the study of white-collar crime, which he said is a difficult phenomenon to grasp, due in part to loose definitions and a lack of statistics on its incidence but mostly because it is rarely uncovered or reported.

Most commonly, he said, white-collar crime involves bribery and corruption, but it also includes such crimes as computer fraud, unnecessary surgery, deceptive advertising, willful manufacture and sale of dangerous products, providing unsafe working conditions and pollution for profit.

Hidden costs of 'high-class' cheating tallied by professor

Last winter, he reported his conclusions to Congress.

In a recent interview, he said he had found that most political rhetoric condeming white-collar crime was hollow criticism void of any real intent to combat the problem.

In fact, he said, the public itself has trouble viewing upper-class persons as actually malevolent. While an outbreak of street crime can outrage and unify a community to act, white-collar crime only breeds "social malaise, distrust, cynicism and greed: 'If others are doing it, I'll get my share, too.' " This is hardly a mandate to crack down on white-collar crime, and the legal system has responded accordingly, he said.

Yet, Geis estimated, white-collar crime costs taxpayers more than $100 billion a year, mostly hidden losses such as uncollected taxes, violations of anti-trust laws, medical program frauds and the expense of cleaning up pollution.

It continues, probably even grows, because the perpetrators operate with relative ease within acceptable social channels, with little fear of being caught and with little fear of what might happen even if they are caught.

"Anglo-Saxon law is very favorable to white-collar criminals," Geis said. "The law is intricate and complicated. There's a lot of feeling (among criminologists) that it isn't up to adequately controlling white-collar crime, even if the will is there."

Geis said that punishment should not only fit the crime but the social position of the criminal as well. To Geis, that means harsher penalties for higher social positions.

"That's a fairly radical doctrine, but it's an area we (criminologists) should talk more frankly about," he said. "I think the fact that the largest percentage of occupants of jails are black or other minority people tells you something about our system of justice."

But the solution, Geis conceded, "is beyond me." The problem is firmly rooted in society, he said. Even Plato encountered it and named it — the Noble Lie.

"The lie is that what you have is what you deserve, that it's God's will. It is a very effective control (of the rich over the poor)."

Modern advertising has aggravated the problem by "creating desires, but only for those who can afford them," he said. "Psychologically, you're a function of the social system you're brought up in, a product of your training and experiences. In this society, self-esteem is measured by what you have."

And if the people who have things, the social leaders, are corrupt, then corrupt behavior is treated lightly. It becomes, by implication, acceptable behavior, he said.

"Punishment is the only feasible way to control white-collar criminals," Geis said. They are more responsive to it than are street criminals; the fear of public scorn is ingrained in them. If being caught is certain, or even fairly likely, even less than harsh punishment will deter the white-collar criminal, Geis said.

The surface of white-collar crime has hardly been scratched, Geis said, but he suggested as a start emphasizing access to corporate information "as one of the more effective controls of bad behavior." A public representative should be included on corporate boards of directors, and the public should have access to much of corporations' records, he said.

By eliminating secrecy and mandating openness, you have a chance to build honesty into the system, he said.

But Geis added that the whole problem must be attacked at once, "from top to bottom." And even then it cannot succeed until Americans shed the attitude that white-collar crime is "illegal, but not criminal."

Krazy Glue caper comes unstuck

Russell Baker

I first met G. Gordon Liddy during Operation Operation. This was the plan to discredit John Dean, who was talking too much to the Grand Jury. Gordon listened quietly as I outlined the plan.

"What we will do," I said, "is infiltrate the Post Office until we have won the patriotic loyalty of the people whose job is to put the stickum on the back of America's postage stamps. Then we will have them substitute Krazy Glue for the stickum for a period of six weeks."

Liddy, whose keen mind was always one jump ahead of mine, saw the beauty of the scheme before I could finish. "Sooner or later," he said, "John Dean will buy one of those stamps to mail a letter, and when he licks it, the Krazy Glue will bond it permanently to the tip of his tongue."

"Exactly," I whispered. "Then, whenever Dean opens his mouth to the Grand Jury, they'll see a postage stamp between his teeth and hear a dreadful lisp, and Dean will be discredited."

Gordon ordered me to start the infiltration process and start buying Krazy Glue in small quantities, so as not to attract the attention of Jack Anderson, but cautioned me to wait for a go-ahead from the higher-ups.

* * *

After a few weeks he summoned me to a rendezvous in a Pennsylvania Avenue doughnut shop. He arrived with a man I later learned was E. Howard Hunt, but whom he called "Wendell."

"I want you to meet Wendell," Gordon told me during introductions.

"Who's Wendell?" Hunt asked him. "I thought there were going to be just the three of us."

Gordon was irritated. "You're Wendell," he told Hunt. "Have you forgotten?"

Now Hunt was irritated. "When we left the office," he said, "you told me I was going to be Seymour. So right in the middle of the operation, all of a sudden you tell me I'm Wendell."

Gordon looked crushed. "Seymour," he said, "I forgot."

"Forget the whole thing," said Hunt, stalking out.

"No," said Gordon. "As the man who planned the operation, I take the responsibility for messing it up." Then Gordon told Hunt that if the higher-ups wanted to punish him, he would be standing on the curb at 17th and M Streets waiting for a car to speed by and splash his best suit with mud from the big pothole at that corner.

* * *

Hunt left in a huff. I told Gordon I'd stand by the pothole with him to prove I was tough and had will, but Gordon said I would just be wasting my time because the higher-ups always forgot you were standing there, and all it meant was that you got home late for dinner.

A month later Gordon called to ask how the postage-stamp operation was proceeding. I confessed I had forgotten about it and offered to be standing on Capitol Hill any time he wanted to drive past and throw potato peels on my best slacks.

"That won't be necessary," Gordon said. He ordered me to a rendezvous at a crab house in Foggy Bottom. There he introduced me to a man he called "Clyde," but whom I recognized as Attorney-General John Mitchell. Mitchell said I was a numbskull. To carry out the postage-stamp operation, he said, millions of stamps would have to be treated before we would have a chance of getting one on Dean's tongue, and by that time half the people in Washington, possibly including the president, would be walking around with stamps on their tongues.

I agreed that was a possibility and said maybe we should rethink the operation, but John said if the president got a stamp on his tongue and couldn't get if off I would have to pay for the surgery. I felt so stupid I wanted to cry, but Gordon told me to go home and burn a hole in my hand to regain my self-respect.

Before my burns healed, of course, Howard Hunt was talking. I met secretly with Gordon under a rhododendron in Lafayette Square and outlined Operation Voodoo, a scheme to discredit Hunt. "We will lure him aboard the presidential yacht, sail it to Haiti, and . . . "

"Haiti's too good for him," Gordon said.

I asked Gordon if he meant . . .

"Exactly," Gordon said. "We will ask him to be standing at the corner of M Street and Wisconsin Avenues." We wrote Hunt a letter to that effect. As usual, the stickum on the back of the stamp was no good, but fortunately I had some long-forgotten Krazy Glue in my hip pocket. While Gordon held the stamp, I put the glue on the back and next thing we knew we were joined at the finger tips.

* * *

We went around like that together for a long time, which gave us the opportunity to plan several new operations, including the discrediting of Jack Anderson by renting a werewolf to bite him so he would have to howl in public when the moon was full. Unfortunately, John Mitchell refused to authorize expenditures for werewolf rental.

This made Gordon and me so angry that we took out our cigarette lighter and burnt ourselves apart at the finger tips and went and stood on the corner of Connecticut Avenue and 16th Street, but everybody forgot we were standing there, and I got home late for dinner.

Ocean Falls firm bidding for revolutionary sawmill

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C. Cellulose Co. is applying for an experimental timber sale licence to feed the timber-starved Ocean Falls Corp. and officials say logging could begin as early as spring or summer next year.

The decision was reached Wednesday following a meeting between B.C. Cellulose chairman Ray Williston and members of the forests, labor and economic development ministries.

Williston said in an interview a number of smaller logging sites must be prepared and "we won't be rolling logs out until maybe next spring or summer."

An experimental sawmill and chipping facility planned for Ocean Falls will mean a major revolution in coast timber utilization, he said.

As the experiment proves wood now considered uneconomic has commercial value, Williston said, it could affect annual allowable cut calculations for all coastal companies.

It will mean the B.C. coast has a lot more commercial wood available than on inventory. That could mean forest companies being allowed to increase harvesting rates.

About 410 employees produced pulp and paper at Ocean Falls, about 500 kilometres north of Vancouver, until a government decision in March to close the plant. The mill was losing money because of aged equipment, high energy costs and wood supply problems.

Meanwhile, chief legal counsel for the Los Angeles Times says the newspaper's contract problems with Ocean Falls over delivery of newsprint appears headed for an amicable settlement.

The Times had indicated last week it may have to sue for delivery of thousand of tons of newsprint from Ocean Falls in a five-year contract.

Overtime ban probe ordered

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Canada Labor Relations Board has ordered an inquiry into a complaint by B.C. Telephone Co. that a union-ordered ban on working overtime is an illegal strike.

B.C. Tel applied to the federal board for a cease-and-desist order after the ban was invoked at the end of May by the Telecommunication Workers Union.

The board assigned staff officer Hugh Jamieson to conduct an inquiry today and Friday.

The board might make a decision based on the report but the parties have the right to make a submission and a formal hearing can be ordered.

$8,000 in pledges to save railway line

KELOWNA (CP) — Okanagan residents have pledged about $8,000 to support a local group's plans to save the 70-year-old Kettle Valley Railway.

Members of the Kettle Valley Railway Heritage Society were to meet today in Vancouver with CP Rail officials to negotiate for part of the Okanagan Valley line.

However, a CP Rail spokesman said Tuesday a contract to remove the tracks probably would be awarded this week. Don Bower said tenders for removal had been let and received.

But Brian Morris of the heritage society said Wednesday the group will negotiate with CP Rail for as much of the line between Penticton and McCulloch as possible.

He said the society had asked Premier Bill Bennett to promise CP Rail it would be relieved of liability related to the track and that the area negotiated will become some kind of a park.

He said the fact that $8,000 was pledged by Okanagan residents following a radio talk show Tuesday indicates how much public support the railway has.

CP Rail abandoned the line in 1973.

Meanwhile in nearby Penticton, the chamber of commerce is upset with the government's decision not to proceed with development of the Kettle Valley line as a tourist attraction.

In a telegram to Premier Bennett, the chamber asks the province to provide CP Rail with tax relief in exchange for not ripping out the tracks.

Beer slug lawsuit $2,000

VANCOUVER (CP) — A 34-year-old sheet metal worker whose beer consumption dropped to 12 bottles a year from 12 bottles a week after he found a slug in his brew, asked in small claims court for $2,000 in damages Wednesday from Labatt's Breweries Ltd.

Joe Passmore said he felt nauseous and he was reluctant to drink beer any more.

Labatt's lawyer Bruce Butler said the company admitted liability for the slug, but argued that Passmore should get only "nominal" damages since he had not presented any medical evidence to show it was detrimental to his health.

Passmore testified he was drinking beer with his friends after work in December, 1978, when the incident occurred.

Decision was reserved.

Council wants straight answers over Kemano

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — City council has sent a telegram to Premier Bill Bennett asking him for details of the public inquiry to be held on the Kemano hydro-electric development.

Alderman Mike Darnell said in a telephone interview Wednesday that council has read conflicting information about the project and wants to make plans for involvement in the inquiry.

Alcan plans full expansion of its existing Kemano project near Kitimat as part of a $2.5-billion plan to triple its smelting capacity. The $800-million hydro-electric expansion would involve changes to the Bulkley, Nechako and Skeena rivers.

Energy Minister Bob McClelland has announced that a public inquiry will be held into the expansion of Kemano but no details of the inquiry have yet been announced.

Tradition holds

PENTICTON (CP) — The Royal Canadian Legion followed tradition Wednesday by electing Al Harvey of St. John's, Nfld., as its president for the next two years.

Harvey was vice-president for the last two years.

He said his priority will be to continue a fight for better pensions for aging veterans.

Verdict reserved

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mr. Justice Harry McKay of B.C. Supreme Court reserved decision Wednesday until July 8 in Combines Act charges against 10 Vancouver area radio and TV stations. The 10 are accused of conspiring in 1976 and 1977 to unduly lessen competition in the sale of air time for commercials by refusing to pay a commission to advertising agencies for business obtained through them unless the agencies were accredited by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters.

Tank truck threat

KAMLOOPS (CP) — A tanker truck fire which threatened to explode the vehicle's chemical cargo was extinguished without mishap Tuesday on the Yellowhead Highway about 20 kilometres outside Kamloops. The truck was carrying trichloralmethane, a toxic chemical used in glues, to Edmonton from Vancouver.

French challenge

PENTICTON (CP) — English-speaking parents who want their children enrolled in French-immersion classes have challenged a Penticton school board interpretation that such classes should be restricted to children of francophone parents.

There were about 100 returns from the circulars asking parents if they were interested in a full program for French instruction. More than 90 per cent of those were from English-speaking families.

Provincial Tories look to Clark

By VIC PARSONS

VANCOUVER (CP) — The leaderless, debt-ridden B.C. Progressive Conservative party welcomes former prime minister Joe Clark this weekend to a meeting that organizers hope will breathe new life and hope into the struggling provincial party.

Clark, who was caught up in an ugly squabble over the role of the provincial party in 1979 when federal and B.C. elections were being held concurrently, will be expected to pay his dues by hanging around for two days beginning Friday as an "informal guest."

He will speak formally Friday night.

The provincial Tories, like their counterparts in the Liberal party, are trying to recover from a exhausting spree of three general elections in less than a year.

Unlike the Liberals, who have no B.C. representation in either federal or provincial parliaments, the Conservatives are strong federally — with 16 of the 28 B.C. seats. The party, however, was wiped out provincially in the May, 1979, B.C. general election.

Elections left them with a debt of about $60,000 and without a leader, as B.C. chieftian Vic Stephens, frustrated with a lack of co-operation from the federal party which he blamed in part on Clark, stepped down in February saying he was more suited to law than the hurly-burly of politics.

Since then, the party has been drifting without a leader and a convention to choose one is not planned until next fall, likely October.

But hope springs eternal, and party diehards hope public disenchantment with the governing Social Credit party will ultimately lead to renewed vigor, replacing the feebleness that has dogged the Conservatives since the 1940s.

CLARK
. . .revival task

Joan Gillanders, provincial party president, said Wednesday a revival of the party will be a tough grind requiring a lot of work and effort.

"Once we get a new leader, things will go ahead," said Ms. Gillanders. "We need the focal point of a leader who can be a spokesman on policy."

Ms. Gillanders said now those "damnable elections" are out of the way, the party has breathing space where it can sit down, work out money-raising plans and go through an internal restructuring. One effort will be to set up a fund that would provide a salary for a new leader.

She says rapport between the federal and provincial levels of the party is "fairly good," unlike the rancor that characterized the B.C. party in April and May, 1979, when some federally-oriented Conservatives openly courted Social Credit provincial workers and spurned campaign efforts of the provincial Tories.

Despite that, Clark may have to sweet-talk party members who felt the provincial faction was betrayed. In the provincial election, 37 Conservative candidates won only five per cent of the vote as Social Credit and the New Democratic Party split nearly all the rest between them.

Stephens said the federal Conservatives conspired in 1979 with Social Credit, coming up with a deal that would keep the provincial party weak in return for support at the federal level.

EDC trade mission $100M success

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian businesses estimate they sold goods worth up to $100 million over the next two years as a result of a trade mission last month to Australia and New Zealand, the industry department said Wednesday.

Sales contracted during the 11-day mission included a $4 million contract by John T. Hepburn Ltd. for the Royal Australian Navy and a letter of intent and down payment to de Havilland Canada for the sale of three Dash-8 aircraft worth a total of $15 million.

The department said 10 companies signed joint venture agreements with Australia and New Zealand companies.

The Export Development Corp., a federal export financing agency, set up u $10 million revolving line of credit for the Australia Industry Development Corp. to finance up to 85 per cent of the cost of Canadian goods purchased by Australian firms.

"Every time I go in there I feel like Alice." That's the comment of a reporter who regularly covers the regional board, but even some of the directors admit to the unreality of events as they unfold behind the looking glass every Wednesday afternoon at 524 Yates Street.

There was director Bob Wright, representing the city of Victoria, muttering: "I can't believe it."

That came after a strange vote following a two-hour debate on whether Salt Spring Island ought to be exempt from the transit tax, the special surcharge on electric bills to pay for buses.

After a tedious discussion which wandered all over the place, to West Vancouver and its municipal transit system, Gambier Island and the Islands Trust, which by itself would have justified a wonderland label, there was the farce of the vote itelf.

Directors voted 21-20 under their weighted system in favor of Salt Spring director Yvette Valcourt's motion to give Salt Spring Islanders freedom from the dreaded transit tax.

Close, but the majority rules, right? Not at the Capital Regional District. According to its special rules the vote lost because only six directors voted in favor, and nine were against.

To pass, the motion required both a majority of votes and a majority of directors. The rule is a safeguard in the Municipal Act designed to prevent domination by the few municipalities with most of the votes. (For example, Saanich and Victoria carry 28 votes under the weighted system, but have only six seats on the 18-member board).

It has had to be used only rarely. On paper it looks like a sensible precaution, although its application in this particular case had most ironic ramifications. It wasn't a case of preventing the two major members of the CRD from dictating to the smaller and less populated electoral areas. The Saanich and Victoria directors, with one exception, were in favor of the motion. They were happy to see Salt Spring go.

Wait for chapter 47 of Islanders in Wonderland, the saga of a people yearning to be free. The close vote only encouraged the separatists out there. We haven't seen the end yet.

It's a mite early, but some political people are already pondering the 1981 municipal election in Victoria. The voting is 18 months away — Victoria aldermen still aren't quite used to that long drought between elections since the city switched to biennial elections of the whole council.

Playing what-might-happen-if helps to fill the empty hole. The mayoral race generates the most speculation. Will Bill Tindall stay on for another term?

He's given no indications one way or the other. Tindall clearly loves the job he has now and he's good at all the ceremonial things which seem to take up much of a mayor's time. He'll be only 60 at the end of his first term.

He'd be almost unbeatable if he ran again. But he might face some opposition. If Tindall decides to step down after one term, Ald. Ron McKenzie would be encouraged to throw his hat in the ring.

Blencoe and McKenzie are ambitious for greater things than Victoria city council. McKenzie has been courting Social Credit assiduously; some see Blencoe as provincial timber for the New Democratic Party.

A term in the mayor's chair wouldn't hurt either man's chances. An alderman who sits, politically, between the two thinks Blencoe would clean up if McKenzie was the opposition but he'd lose against Tindall.

Whatever happens in the mayor's chair there may be even greater changes among the aldermen. More than half may not be around after the '81 election.

Bob Wright is undecided but probably leaning toward calling it quits after six years. He has no desire to be mayor. He's done almost everything he set out to do on council. It's time to slow down and enjoy life.

Frank Carson and Ken Sinclair may also decide the job is not worth the time and the effort. Bill McElroy is making noises about maybe getting out.

One oldtimer loved the job so much he wants back in. The joker in the pack — Murray Glazier — came third in a three-way race for mayor last fall, upsetting his eventual plans for federal office. The possibility of his return to council scares some people. He's been popping up at public gatherings all year and Glazier clearly wants his council seat back. A byelection would be nice, but if nothing turns up he'll be around on nomination day next year.

By AB KENT

Helen Caine is from a Jewish family, but even that did not prepare her for what her daughter said after school one day.

The girl's class had been talking about the holocaust, Hitler's genocidal solution to the Jewish question.

And they laughed.

It was obvious the children knew little of one of history's most shameful horrors, the decimation of two-thirds of European Jews during the Second World War in a process that began in full sight of the world six years before the first shots were fired.

Caine said she realized social studies courses simply were not paying much attention to the subject. Perhaps her women's group could help.

Last October the Victoria chapter of Hadassah-WIZO (Women's International Zionist Organization) offered a Holocaust program and $100 for the best Holocaust essay written by a Victoria secondary school student; $75 for second prize.

This week the winners were announced — two girls whose writing demonstrates that conscience and shame and concern for humanity lives on, once the facts are exposed.

First prize went to Kate Sandilands, 15, of 2921 Seaview, a Grade 10 student at Arbutus Junior. Second was Susan Andrews, 16, of 3496 Henderson, Grade 11 at Mt. Douglas Senior.

Sandilands compared the climate of pre-war Germany with contemporary times:

"Are we not, in our world of the '80s, just as apt to only see what pleases us?

"For example, do we not tend to forget the poverty of those in Bangladesh and similar countries, the cruel oppression of the Cambodians and even the appalling conditions under which some of our fellow Canadians live?

"Do we not prefer to cast these images away as fiction to concentrate on our own more pleasant existence?

"To ignore what distresses us, will that not always be a human tendency?" the girl wrote.

Fellow winner Andrews noted the purge of Jews began in Germany years before the death camps were considered, scapegoats perhaps for the ills of that country.

"Why did six million Jews die?" she asked. "Because we, as the human race, let them."

Hadassah started its Holocaust program by informing delegates to the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association convention and seeking school board cooperation. Interested teachers asked for a program in their classes, including a guest speaker.

Although the contest had a relatively late start, some 35 students wrote essays.

"The approach of the committee was not to appeal to students on a purely emotional level, rather an intellectual one that seeks to understand the history, culture and psychology of the event," said Caine, who is president of Victoria Hadassah-WIZO.

She said it is difficult to assess the impact, but was encouraged by the high quality of the winning submissions.

"So much," she said, "depends upon the teachers."

Log clips wings of Princess

The jetfoil The Flying Princess broke a shearpin when it collided with a log Wednesday afternoon, forcing it to arrive in Seattle 40 minutes late.

The return trip to Victoria was cancelled and some passengers were flown up in chartered planes.

The jetfoil is back in service today.

When the underwater foil hits a large object, the shearpin breaks, being the weakest part of the device. It causes the foil to collapse, minimizing the shock of the collision.

The passenger part of the vehicle, which had been held above water by the submerged foil, settles onto the waves and the jetfoil proceeds like an ordinary boat. The speed became less than half the rate when the jetfoil is operating above the waves.

The engine was not damaged in any way.

The return trip to Victoria had been scheduled to leave Seattle at 4 p.m. It was the first cancellation due to accident.

Passengers who opted to go to Victoria aboard the Victoria Princess ferry at 6:30 p.m. were given a refund on the difference of the fares (the ferry is $15, the jetfoil $25) plus a free dinner aboard ship.

Boeing, which owns the jetfoil, repaired the shearpin overnight.

Get rid of perishables Safeway supplier told

Macdonald's Consolidated Ltd., which supplies groceries to B.C. Safeway stores, has been told to clear out its perishables by midnight Tuesday night following notice of strike preparation by the Retail Wholesale and Department Store Union.

Talks between management and the RWDSU, which represents about 825 warehouse workers in 88 stores in the Vancouver area, Victoria and Dawson Creek, stalled Tuesday but are expected to resume before next week's deadline.

Shelves in most Safeway stores will be empty about four days after the deadline and more than 5,000 workers will laid off if the dispute isn't resolved, a Safeway spokesman said.

Warehouse workers at Macdonalds, Lucerne Foods Ltd. and Empress Foods have been without a contract since March 31, 1980. They are now earning between $9 and $12 an hour.

At issue are wages, sick leave, shift premiums, welfare and pensions benefits and classification adjustments.

Meanwhile, the 10-day strike at Woodward's, continues, with pickets at the Victoria and Port Alberni stores. Strikers have withdrawn from the main distribution warehouse in Richmond, which supplies the company's 13 B.C. food floors.

Government mediator Ken Albertini has entered the dispute in an attempt to end the strike over union security and better wages and benefits.

Dropout site planned in elementary school

South Fairfield parents tonight will hear an administration proposal to turn Sir James Douglas School annex into a dropout recovery centre for older children.

District 61 superintendent Allan Stables is invited to attend a SJD parents' committee meeting at 7:30 on the school's second floor, said committee president Carol Doroshuk.

The two-room annex is one of the older brick structures on the property at Moss and Fairfield and its use lately has been by various community groups. At present it is rented by the YM-YWCA for pre-school classes.

Although it is "a lovely little building," space heaters make it unacceptable for regular school purposes, said SJD parents' past-president Miria Gordaneer.

She also said the school district proposal seems a definite one, even though a number of parents are concerned about the prospect of having elementary children mingling with what may by problem students from secondary levels.

"I think the only objection may be that we will have older students hanging around the school yard with younger ones, and will perhaps be an influence on them," Gordaneer said.

The proposal would be aimed at children in the 13-15 age bracket, potential dropouts or who have already left school for behavioral, academic or other reasons, drawing population from S.J. Willis, Central and two other junior secondary schools.

Another annex on the school grounds is also superfluous to SJD needs. This is a frame building on Fairfield now used by seniors in the community.

Body shop price hike sought

British Columbia body shops have asked ICBC to return to the bargaining table to negotiate a 1980 rate for work done under the government-run insurance program.

ICBC awarded the shops a $2-an-hour increase to $25.60 in April but the Automotive Retailers Association says that had been sought last year and is really a 1979 increase.

"Now we are seeking an increase for 1980 because of our increased costs," said ARA general manager Ron Baldwin.

Elderly help elderly with $20,000 grant

Helping the elderly to help each other is the intent of a recent grant from the federal New Horizons program.

The Seniors Serving Seniors group of Victoria has received $20,520 to establish a registry of services available on a mutual exchange basis.

Group president is A. L. Cartier, 205-1149 Rockland Avenue.

Transit protest shot down

Despite a vote to the contrary, Salt Spring Islanders will continue to be in the Capital Regional District's transit area.

A two-hour debate Wednesday ended in directors voting 21-20 that the island be excluded, but a section of the Municipal Act states that a majority of regional directors is needed for a passing vote.

In Wednesday's vote six directors — holding 21 votes based on the population of the area they represent — voted in favor of the island being excluded but nine directors — fielding 20 votes — were opposed.

She said the islanders do not want a bus service and 1,200 people are refusing to pay their Hydro bills in protest.

Ken Arnott, a member of the Islands Trust transportation committee, said even if the service between Swartz Bay and downtown Victoria was improved, Salt Spring Islanders would be forced to use their cars because there is no parking area near the ferry terminal on the island.

Betty Pinchin, one of those who collected names for the petition, said island residents want no part of a bus service. She said a private operator had tried to put in a free service from the downtown Ganges area to the hospital and only two people had used it in three weeks.

Valcourt said protesters included the Islands Trust and the Salt Spring Water District. The water district, according to a letter, is a non-profit organization but each of its eight meters is charged at the $90 annual commercial rate.

It was suggested by Sidney mayor Norma Sealey, chairman of the transit planning and management committee, that Salt Spring be excluded from the transit area at the beginning of the next fiscal year but director Bill McElroy claimed this would mean the regional district would be charging for services it had no intention of implementing.

Regional board chairman Jim Campbell, director for the outer Gulf Islands, was among those who voted against Salt Spring Island being excluded.

Directors did agree, however, that the provincial government, which has been asked to draft legislation to allow transit payments to be pro-rated to service provided to Port Renfrew and Jordan River, be asked to add Salt Spring Island to that request.

Adult care centre opening Tuesday

The adult care centre at the Oak Bay Lodge will have its official opening June 17.

Health Minister Rafe Mair will speak at the opening of the centre which will provide social activities and services for senior citizens who, for health reasons, are confined to their homes or whose families are unable to provide activities during the day.

Transportation to and from the centre will be provided.

The lodge houses 150 senior citizens receiving long term care and the day care centre will provide kitchen facilities, space for recreation, reading and conversation.

The program is designed for those seniors who may be able to remain independent with a little assistance.

Howie runs for 24-hour record

Howie — now without his familiar red beard — will try to break the existing world record of 161 miles, 500 yards run in 24 hours.

To get the official scrutiny required to challenge a world record Howie will run in the Labatts 24-Hour Relay in Vancouver.

While others taking part will belong to 10-member relay teams, Howie will run by himself over the three-mile course around Swangard Stadium.

The relay will begin at 10 a.m. June 21.

Howie says the competition with others in the relay should help him with his speed. He said he expects he can outrun many of the recreational relay teams in the race although the teams of serious runners will probably outdistance him.

Howie will seek pledges to contribute to the B.C. Lions Society for Cripple Children for this run, as with many of his runs. He hopes Labatts, the relay's sponsor, also will contribute.

Anyone wishing to pledge for the run can contact: Seawall Running Society, 1200 Hornby, Vancouver.

'Blameless' wife beater given an absolute discharge

A 44-year-old Victoria businessman was given an absolute discharge for one offence and conditional discharges on two others in county court Wednesday.

William Terrence Popp had pleaded guilty to being unlawfully in the dwelling of Norma Elizabeth Witters on Summit Street with intent to commit an indictable offence, forcible seizure and confinement of his wife Carol Ann Popp and assault causing bodily harm to her.

Judge E.J.C. Stewart ruled, however, that no convictions will be recorded on any of the offences. He granted an absolute discharge for being in Witters residence and a conditional discharge with one year's probation on the other charges.

Defence counsel David Lisson had argued the case was appropriate for a conditional or absolute discharge saying Popp was a good, honest, law-abiding citizen except for a few hours in the early morning of Jan. 12.

Crown counsel Richard Law had replied that the prosecution would view such a disposition as a travesty and said the public cannot be left with the impression that wives can suffer punishment and husbands receive less remonstrance than a stranger from the court.

Judge Stewart said the public interest was not served by recording convictions but added that this certainly didn't mean that a man with an unblemished record can with impunity indulge in a wife-battering spree.

He noted that the Popps, who had been separated for 11 months when the incident occurred, were locked in bitter civil litigation which gave every indication of continuing.

Popp had reached the stage last January where his reasoning powers were seriously disrupted by a campaign of harassment, real or fancied, which he blamed on Mrs. Popp and Mrs. Witters, said Stewart.

Popp was determined to end the harassment and went to the Witters house where he was surprised to find the two women in the company of two men.

This, said Stewart, was something Popp could never have contemplated and one could imagine the consternation which caused him to lose all control entirely which was foreign for his character.

Stewart said what happened was an inexcusable assault on a slight, defenceless woman by a relatively-powerful man.

But he also noted Popp's blameless previous record and from character witnesses he was a successful, industrious man and a good citizen.

It was a single incident in an otherwise blameless life, Popp had spent eight days in custody after his arrest, and no matter what people say it seemed likely that his business and social relationships will be marred and that was punishment.

Stewart asked if it was necessary in the public interest to record convictions against Popp or whether it was adverse to the public interest if convictions were not recorded. He could not say how the public interest would be served by recording convictions.

Before the judge

A 32-year-old man was given concurrent sentences of 30 and 90 days Wednesday in Victoria provincial court for theft of money from his employer and public mischief in reporting a phoney robbery.

Lawrence David Barty, of 1312 Gladstone, was accused of stealing $128 from Orange Julius, at 720 Yates, Feb. 8 and trying to cover it up by reporting to Victoria police that he was robbed.

* * *

A 20-year-old youth was given a three-month jail term after pleading guilty to a breach of his probation order.

Judge Lorne Pearce handed the sentence to Donald Lawrence Schneider, who pleaded guilty to failing to report to his probation officer after his release from prison.

Crown counsel Wayne Smith said Schneider was convicted March 10 of two counts of theft under $200 and was given a 60-day jail term and placed on two years probation.

Smith said Schneider was released from custody April 18 and was to report immediately to his probation order.

Schneider failed to obey the order and was picked up about noon 11 days later and taken to the probation officer where he was told to wait until his probation officer returned from lunch at 2 p.m.

Schneider said he had to go to the bathroom and disappeared, Smith said.

The youth had a lengthy criminal record dating back to April 23, 1976, in Toronto, when he was convicted of breaking and entering.

* * *

"It's pretty childish action for a 24-year-old man," Pearce said before handing out a suspended sentence, six months probation, and 36 hours of community service work to Gary Howard Grant, of 1900 Fernwood.

"I would expect it of a nine- or 10-year-old," the judge commented.

Court was told Grant smashed a rear light of the truck, which was stopped to unload some children at the youth hostel where Grant lived. Damage was placed at $25.

Defence lawyer Fredric Bronson said Grant had a fight with his girlfriend just before the incident and was taking out his anger.

Pearce said he would recommend the work be done for the B.C. Lions Society, "if they'll have you."

* * *

Judge Harold Alder handed out a 14-day jail term to a 51-year-old woman who pleaded guilty to impaired driving.

Doreen Margaret Hunt, of 208 Skinner, was also placed on six months probation.

Hunt was involved in a motor vehicle accident at about 8:30 p.m., Dec. 16, at Hillside and Quadra. Total damage to the two vehicles was placed at $1,100.

She had a previous conviction for impaired driving Feb. 9, 1978, when she was fined $400.

* * *

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: James Howard Paterson, 24, $450; and Michael William Bishop, 18, of 2097 Millstream, $200.

IWA workers walk off job

WILLIAMS LAKE (CP) — About 220 members of the International Woodworkers of America were off the job today at the Pinette and Therrien mill in a dispute over the suspension of two employees.

Company spokesman Bill Shore said the workers were suspended for four hours Wednesday night because they took extended coffee breaks in the wrong lunchroom.

IWA Local 1-425 spokesman Harvey Arcand said there were other reasons why the members walked out job, but he would not elaborate.

Making Canadians bigger. And Canada smaller.

Body knifed 24 times

A 31-year-old Saanich woman died after being stabbed 24 times and 15 of the wounds required a considerable amount of force, pathologist Dr. Frank Berry told a B.C. Supreme Court jury Wednesday.

He said three wounds penetrated Marion Barbara MacKay's heart, four pierced a lung and one rib was fractured.

Denis Barry McFadden, 29, of Sidney is standing trial accused of first-degree murder.

Berry said the wounds were caused by a sharp object and could have been caused by a carving knife which McFadden owned.

He said four wounds which penetrated the right lung would likely cause death in an hour. It was his opinion they were the first wounds. He said "I think not, no" when asked if a person wounded like that could scream.

Wounds on the left side of the chest, three of which penetrated the heart, would cause death almost instantaneously, he said.

Berry, who performed his autopsy March 18 after MacKay's body was found wrapped in a tarpaulin in a boat, said there were lacerations on a thumb and two fingers which could have been caused by MacKay grabbing the blade of a knife.

Cross-examined by defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood, Berry said there was nothing in his examination of MacKay which indicated a sexual assault.

Michael Gibson, 32, who was MacKay's boyfriend, said they were to go to a show March 17 and she was to come to his house at 6.40 p.m.

She didn't arrive and he telephoned her at 7.10 p.m. but there was no answer.

He called her twice again and there was no answer.

Thinking she may have had a car accident, he called Saanich police but there were none so he drove to her house on Old West Saanich Road.

The lights were on but there was no answer when he knocked on the door. He walked around the house and saw the main bedroom window broken out. There was also a smaller window which was broken and which he had seen a week or two earlier.

Gibson said he looked in and saw blood, then climbed into the house. She was not there and he phoned hospitals and police. After police arrived, he drove to see one of MacKay's girlfriends and called police and said something wasn't right.

He then returned to the house and met police again.

Gibson said he had spoken to MacKay twice on the phone that day, once at noon and again at 6 p.m. She was in a cheerful mood. On the second call, she said "the plumber was there" and she would come over to Gibson's house after he left.

The jury was excused until 2 p.m. today.

Lacrosse is fast, fun say the lady Dolphins

No longer do women wear long frilly dresses, carry parasols and recoil in horror at the thought of engaging in anything more physical than a genteel game of croquet. Not all at the same time, anyway.

Their active role in many rough-and-tumble sports previously regarded as boys' games — the most popular of which is soccer — has been accepted for several years now.

And so, when someone asks you if you knew there was a women's lacrosse team playing in Victoria your reaction could well be 'So what!'

Well, the girls' coach Randy Smith would like you to know there is a team so you'll come out and watch it — not because it's an oddity but because they play an entertaining brand of lacrosse that's worth watching. And because they need some support.

Victoria Dolphins, the one Island side with four Lower Mainland teams playing in the Inter-City Senior Women's Lacrosse League, has home games every second Saturday and Sunday at 1 p.m. in George Pearkes Arena. The weekends between, they're away for two games on the Mainland.

But Smith, who plays himself for Victoria Athletics in the Senior "B" League and who took over the Dolphins this year, has chosen the worst possible time to try to round up supporters for his women's team: You see, it isn't a winner right now. In fact, it's a outright loser with eight straight defeats in its first eight games this season!

Then again, though, perhaps it's the best possible time as what the club needs more than anything to put it on the right track is a few more hearty voices yelling in support from the stand. That, plus, says coach Smith, "that first victory to give us confidence."

Well, they didn't get it in their home arena Saturday and they didn't get it as I watched them Sunday, going down 6-4 to Richmond Iode Titans despite leading 2-1 in the second period.

"If they lose by one goal or by 10, there's still a lot of spirit," he explains. "There's never an 'Oh damn it, I quit!' attitude.

"The thing is, too, we have a job getting enough players in Victoria as, after minor lacrosse when the small girls can play on boys' teams, there is nothing here for teenagers until they join the Dolphins."

Mainly Smith, who took over as coach at the start of this season from Shamrocks goalie Larry Smeltzer, has players ranging in age from 17 to 22, although he does have one 14-year-old and another girl of 16.

"This season we have three girls who have never played before," the coach explains. "They came out to practice and didn't even know how to hold the stick! But they're getting better all the time and learning every game."

And they are the exception. Many of the girls have played for several seasons and some, like 20-year-old captain Jacque Morrow, have been with the Dolphins for all three years the club has been in existence.

"I just love it," says Jacque, a former Dunsmuir High School student who now works for B.C. Tel. "At school, I did everything — grass hockey, basketball, track and field, soccer — and I play soccer now in the winter for Lakehill women's team. But lacrosse is fun. It's challenging and it's fast . . . I like that."

Obviously, Dolphins have seen better days. There were times when they used to win a few now and then. Last season, in fact, the Victoria girls placed third in the Canadian National Women's Lacrosse Championships in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Those days will return — soon, coach Smith says confidently.

"One win, I believe, will turn us around and give us the confidence we need to go on to greater things," he points out. "And I'm sure we'll get that elusive first win this weekend when we go over to play Burnaby on Saturday and Coquitlam on Sunday."

Soccer favorites edged

ROME (AP) — Heavily-favored West Germany edged defending champion Czechoslovakia 1-0 in the opening game of the European soccer championships Wednesday at the Olympic Stadium.

A meagre crowd of 15,000 showered the players with continuous rounds of whistles and jeers at every mistake committed by both sides in the dull contest.

The goalkeepers were virtually without work as play stagnated at midfield and the forwards missed the few opportunities they managed to put together.

Rocks sag in second period; trail Adanacs by four points

Coquitlam Adanacs took advantage of a second-period lapse to defeat Victoria Shamrocks 8-6 in a Western Lacrosse Association game before about 1,300 fans Wednesday night at Memorial Arena.

Frank Nielsen also played a starring role for Adanacs, who outscored the Irish 5-1 in the middle frame, by shadowing Victoria's league-leading marksman Kevin Alexander and limiting him to two goals.

The loss leaves Shamrocks four points behind Coquitlam in the race for a berth in the world box lacrosse championship next month. The leader on June 21 will represent the WLA in the Nations 80 tourney and if Adanacs and the Rocks are tied, Coquitlam will take the berth on the basis of winning three of the four games between the clubs.

Play was fairly even in the first 20 minutes, but the second period belonged to Coquitlam.

"We took the middle away from them in the second period," said Adanac coach Bob Salt. "They weren't hitting us at all so we took advantage."

Only some excellent goaltending by Victoria's Larry Smeltzer prevented Coquitlam, which led 2-1 after the first frame, from taking more than a 7-2 advantage.

Smeltzer blocked 40 shots and Thomas made 34 saves.

Alexander did manage to score twice but both goals came while Nielsen was in the penalty box. In addition, Alexander's frustration produced six minutes of penalties.

Shamrocks rallied a little in the third period but couldn't break through a tough Coquitlam defence enough to catch up.

Ray Mattinson led Adanacs with two goals, while Jim Aitchison, Moe Jodoin, Mat Aitken, Rico Bellusci, Gord Quilty and Randy Bryan had single markers.

Jeevan Dillon, Jack Kastelein, Paul Michael and Bill Marechek rounded out the Victoria scoring.

'Cancerous' one on way out

TORONTO (CP) — Darryl Sittler's days as a member of Toronto Maple Leafs are over, Leafs' owner Harold Ballard said Wednesday.

"Punch (general manager Imlach) and I have discussed the situation at length and we've decided that Darryl Sittler will never wear a Maple Leaf uniform again," Ballard said.

Ballard said that his lawyers believe that Sittler's claim to a no-trade contract is not correct.

"But I wouldn't go to court against Sittler anyway," Ballard said. "If he is so much against being traded, then we just won't invite him to training camp next season.

"I'd pay him to stay away rather than have him come back again. We don't want him with us anymore. It just isn't worth having someone in our organization who is cancerous, as Sittler is."

Ballard said he would still honor Sittler's contract and pay him.

Imlach said he got what he wanted in the person of Washington Capitals' defenceman Robert Picard. Whether the Capitals get what they want — Palmateer — didn't concern Imlach.

"We had to get a top-notch player for Palmateer, obviously," said Imlach after dealing the free agent goalie's contract to Washington for Picard and forward Tim Coulis. A swap of choices in the National Hockey League entry draft also was involved and both clubs wound up with underage players from Victoria Cougars of the Western Major Junior League.

Palmateer became a free agent June 1 after a stormy season in which he said he wanted out of Toronto. He was reported to have turned down a three-year contract at $200,000 a season, holding out for a five-year agreement.

Al Eagleson, Palmateer's agent, said today that the goalie already has agreed to terms with the Capitals — a four-year contract for a reported $800,000.

"We're very, very pleased, of course," said Washington coach Gary Green, who was attending the draft in Montreal. "We know that to build a championship team, you have to start between the pipes.

"Mike is a premier goalie and one of the best in the league.

"We got Darren Veitch (drafted from Regina Pats) and, of course, we know that he can't fill Picard's shoes right away, but we know that in the future he will do the job for us," Green said.

Imlach, meanwhile, had rid himself of an apparent personality conflict. Commenting on the deal, Imlach said: "Looking at the loss of Palmateer, I think he played only 40 games for us last year, but we know Picard can play 80, so we're ahead, right?"

The injured Coulis, 22, played 19 games with the Capitals last season, scoring one goal and earning two assists.

The trade also saw Toronto receive Washington's second-round entry draft choice, while the Capitals got a third-round pick that the Maple Leafs had acquired from Calgary Flames.

Ticat rally sinks Argos

TORONTO (CP) — Bruce Lemmerman connected with Bob Gaddis for a 77 pass-and-run play with 4:44 left to play in the game as Hamilton Tiger-Cats rallied to defeat Toronto Argonauts 37-29 in a Canadian Football League preseason game Wednesday.

Trailing 29-27, Gaddis was left completely uncovered as he ambled down the left sidelines and Lemmerman, who played the entire second half in relief of Dave Marler, hit the ex-Montreal Alouette with a pass to send the Ticats into the lead for good.

Earlier in the final quarter at 5:51, Lemmerman scored from one yard out to bring the Ticats back from 29-21 deficit.

Adams was relieved by Mark Jackson for the remainder of the first half while rookie quarterback Jimmy Streater entertained the crowd of 30,172 in the second half.

Marler was the outstanding player of the game, however, directing the Ticats to three consecutive scoring drives in the second quarter while completing 18 of 22 passes for 268 yards in one half of play.

Marler connected on a nine-yard scoring pass with Rocky DiPietro. Ronny Rowland on a one-yard run and Phil Colwell on a two-yard run also scored second-quarter touchdowns for the Ticats. Zenon Andrusyshyn added four coversions and a field goal.

Jackson passed six yards to Muller for Toronto's first touchdown and connected on a 92-yard bomb with Terry Greer on the last play of the first half.

Rick Kalvaitis scored on a 37-yard pass interception and Streater added a touchdown in the fourth quarter on a 55-yard sprint. Ian Sunnter kicked three conversions and Blaine added a single and a conversion.

Tigers will retire No. 6

DETROIT (AP) — For the first time in the club's history, Detroit Tigers will retire a number.

Outfielder Al Kaline's No. 6 will be retired by the American League baseball team in an official ceremony Aug. 17.

Kaline, a member of the Tigers when he was only 18 and the youngest (20) to win a batting championship, was elected to the Hall of Fame this year on the first ballot. He played 22 seasons with Detroit, collecting 3,007 hits.

MacDonald eliminated

PORTHCAWL, Wales (CP) — Glenn MacDonald of Vancouver, the last Canadian remaining in the British amateur golf championship, was eliminated today when he lost to Andrew Parkin of Britain 5 and 4.

MacDonald had survived until the fourth round, representing the final 16 winners of the match-play tournament which started with a field of 128 golfers.

Ronan Rafferty, 16, of Ireland, provided the big upset of the day when he defeated Michael Bonallack, 45, by one hole. Bonallack has won five British amateur titles.

Draft reflects Cougar power

Montreal Canadiens, with the premier selection, were pleased with their grab and most other National Hockey League teams expressed pleasure, at least for public consumption, with their choices in the annual entry draft.

There was great satisfaction, too, from the "giving" side Wednesday.

Victoria Cougars' contribution of seven players was seen by coach Jack Shupe as "an excellent reflection of the quality" that exists on the Western Hockey League team. Only Portland Winter Hawks, contributing eight players to the draft, provided more from the West.

Six of the seven Victoria players claimed all have at least another season of junior eligibility ahead of them and Shupe "will be surprised" if all six are not returned to the Cougars for the 1980-81 campaign.

Two other graduates — winger Greg Adams and defenceman Mark Robinson — were claimed in last year's draft, by Philadelphia Flyers and Buffalo Sabres, respectively, and Shupe feels the pros' talent grab "is an excellent reflection of the quality" Victoria enjoys.

Winger Brad Palmer and centre Barry Pederson both went in the prestigous first round. Palmer, 16th overall, was claimed by Washington Capitals and Pederson, 18th, went on the Boston Bruins' protected list.

Defencemen Bob McGill (Toronto Maple Leafs) and Len Dawes (Chicago Black Hawks) both went in the second round. Both are 18 and have two more junior seasons ahead of them.

* * *

Graduating right winger Bob Jansch was the other Cougar to go. Colorado Rockies took Jansch in the 10th round. It was a choice that delighted Shupe, who feels Jansch "may have a good shot" at catching on with the NHL team. While Palmer and Pederson were regarded more highly, both will have to earn their spurs with teams that emerged with established lineups last season.

Three other Vancouver Island products also were claimed. John Newberry of Victoria, who had a record-breaking season with Cougars' tier two affiliate in Nanaimo, was Montreal's third-round pick; Brent Denat of Victoria, enrolled at Michigan Tech, was Hartford Whalers' eighth-round choice, and Brian Lundberg of Lake Cowichan and University of Michigan went to Pittsburgh in the ninth round.

Doug Wickenheiser, the first pick, and the Canadiens share the same ambition: Both want the 19-year-old centre from Regina Pats to make the squad next season.

"It's certainly a boost for my confidence," Wickenheiser said after Ron Caron, Montreal's director of personnel, said the NHL club wants the No. 1 selection in the entry draft to step right into the lineup.

Winnipeg Jets drafted second — teams chose in the reverse order of the 1979-80 over-all standings — and grabbed defenceman Dave Babych of Portland. Babych, 6-foot-2, 200 pounds, was coveted by several clubs. Jets general manager John Ferguson said he received trade offers for the second draft choice from seven clubs.

The first goalie taken was Don Beaupre of Sudbury Wolves, by Minnesota in the second round. For Victoria, the disappointment was that none of the NHL teams picked Kevin Eastman, who topped all WHL netminders during the regular campaign.

Kicks shatter Sounder skein

Times News Services

Goaltender Tino Lettieri was almost ready to run for cover near the conclusion of the North American Soccer League game Wednesday night between Minnesota Kicks and Seattle Sounders.

"It was terrible," said Lettieri, who withstood Seattle's last-ditch fury to keep an 11-game winning streak alive allowing the Kicks to upset the Sounders 3-2. "I've never seen so much action at the end of a game before."

In other NASL games, New York doubled Rochester 4-2, San Jose blanked Detroit 1-0 and San Diego shut out Portland 1-0.

The victory in a decisive game against the league-leading Sounders, 13-2, before 15,503 fans vaulted the Kicks, 5-8, from last place to second place in the Central Division of the National Conference.

"I died a thousand deaths at the end," said Minnesota Coach Freddie Goodwin. "That was a long, long last five minutes."

The triumph also ended another streak — a 10-game scoreless streak by Minnesota striker Alan Willey, who gave Minnesota a 1-0 lead early in the game.

"This was a must game for us," said Lettieri, who came up with spectacular saves when the Kicks needed them most. "It lifts us emotionally."

Wiltjer jolts Huskies with change of mind

SEATTLE (AP) — University of Washington's basketball program has received a major setback with the loss of 6-foot-11 Greg Wiltjer, expected to be the Huskies' starting centre next winter.

Wiltjer, from Victoria, signed a national letter of intent April 9 to attend Washington but he said Tuesday he was backing out of the agreement and would return to North Idaho Junior College.

He said his anxieties about entering a big school, about stiffer academic challenges and about tieing himself for three years to a weak program were behind his decision.

"I'm quite surprised," said Huskies' Coach Marv Harshman. "I hope we can change his mind. But if it happens, I guess it happens and we're not in a very good position."

Rads clip juniors

A three-run homer cracked by shortstop Rob Stephens helped Capital Radiators of the Cosmopolitan Senior Baseball League edge Victoria Merchants 6-5 in an interlocking game at Lambrick Park Wednesday night.

Stephens, who cleared the bases in the first inning, doubled and scored in the third inning to put Capitals ahead of the Merchants, who play in the Pacific Junior "A" Baseball League, 6-3.

Doug Rogers contributed a two-run single for the Capitals.

Merchants	210 001 1	—5 6 3

LeFlore's two-out single boosts Expos over Padres

Times News Services

Ron LeFlore didn't really expect to bat in the ninth inning Wednesday night in Montreal but San Diego Padres are sorry that he did.

The Montreal Expos outfielder strolled to the plate after a rare single by reliever Elias Sosa had prolonged the inning and LeFlore promptly stroked a two-out single which lifted the Expos to a 7-6 triumph, their eighth National League baseball victory in a row.

"I wasn't sure I'd get up there, but our pitchers have been hitting well this season," said LeFlore. "They've been getting the hits when they've needed them."

Chris Speier engineered the winning run by drawing a walk after two out and Sosa, who has a .116 career batting average, ripped a single to right, sending Speier to second.

"To be honest with you, I'm really not that good a hitter," Sosa said. "On the first pitch I tried to punch the ball. When that didn't work I decided to swing hard and keep my eye on the ball, and I managed to hit a line drive."

The Padres then had the option of sticking with left-hander Bob Shirley, 5-2, or bringing in a right-handed pitcher to face the right-hand hitting LeFlore.

"I wasn't really that surprised when they stayed with Shirley," said LeFlore. "After all, why would you want to take out the pitcher with the best record on your team?"

LeFlore quickly foiled the strategy, however, drilling a pitch up the middle for his third run-batted-in of the game.

After spending six seasons in an also-ran position with Detroit Tigers of the American League, LeFlore relishes his role with a contending club.

"You've got to come to the ball park feeling comfortable," he said. "I was never tense, even when we weren't winning. These guys are the same, and I think I blend right in with them in that respect."

In other National League games, J.R. Richard, the flame-throwing Houston right-hander, fired his third consecutive shutout and stretched his scoreless inning string to a club-record 31 by hurling the Astros to a 3-0 victory over Chicago Cubs, New York Mets surprised Los Angeles Dodgers 6-2, Cincinnati Reds edged Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2, San Francisco Giants downed Philadelphia Phillies 7-4, and St. Louis Cardinals shaded Atlanta Braves 4-3 in 10 innings.

In the American League, Oakland A's dropped Baltimore Orioles 6-2, Milwaukee Brewers pounded Texas Rangers 7-1, Chicago White Sox defeated Toronto Blue Jays 7-4, Minnesota Twins beat Detroit Tigers 9-5, Boston Red Sox downed Seattle Mariners 7-5, New York Yankees topped California Angels 9-7 in 11 innings and, in a doubleheader, Kansas City Royals split with Cleveland Indians, winning 5-0 and losing 8-5.

Mahovlic leading by two

Doug Mahovlic took a commanding step in defence of his title on home turf Wednesday, carding a two-under-par 69 to take a two-stroke lead in the Vancouver Island Assistants championship at Victoria Club.

Mahovlic counted five birdies and three bogies in the first round of the 36-hole, $3,000 tourney.

Rob Watson of Chilliwack is second with 71 and was followed by Norm Jarvis of Burnaby Mountain with 72 and Mark Forrest of Nanaimo with 73.

DeGirolamo taking straight-line route

"The shortest distance . . ."

The medallist and defending champion has yet to go play the 15th hole after two match-play encounters in this year's scramble for the CFAX Trophy at Cedar Hill Golf Club.

Playing par golf, the Gorge Vale member moved into today's semi-finals by defeating Jeannie Hopps of Uplands 6 and 4 Wednesday. In her opening match, DeGirolamo beat Myra McLean of Royal Colwood 7 and 5.

DeGirolamo met Diane Phillips of Uplands, her rival in last year's final, in this morning's semi-final action. The winner will play either Pat Derry or Joanne Smith, who set up an all-Colwood battle in the other semi-final, in Friday's championship showdown at the Saanich municipal course.

Phillips advanced with a 3 and 2 triumph over Juanita Turner of Gorge Vale; Derry, the 1978 finalist, sidelined Maureen Hibberson of Uplands 3 and 2, while Smith, also impressive in her early rounds, beat Colwood clubmate Edythe McCormack 6 and 5.

DeGirolamo defeated six different opponents in her six title triumphs.

Seasprays, Builders tie

Catcher Avie Stubbington whacked a home run in the first inning for Seaspray Properties Wednesday night but it wasn't quite enough as his team fought through 11 innings for a 1-1 tie with Juan de Fuca Builders in their Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball league game at Central Park.

The game was called because of darkness.

Juan de Fuca also scored in the first inning with Marty Dunn drawing a base on balls and scoring on Lee Putney's single.

Mears Realty needed an extra innings to shade Strathcona Stingers 6-5 in a Heywood Avenue Men's League game.

Bruce Thompson hit a triple to lead off the 10th inning for Mears and scored the winning run on a single by pitcher Dave Green.

Barry Moen hit a three-run homer for the winners and Don Marshall smacked a two-run homer for the Stingers.

Gary Arnold also hit a three-run homer in leading James Bay Inn to a 7-6 win over Coast Projects in the Macdonald Park Men's League while Dan Tournigan and Larry Bednar hit homers as Rebels thrashed Trafalgar Legion 8-1.

In Victoria-Saanich Women's Softball League games, Bemister's Welding and Tillicum Shoppers Drug Mart scored victories at Hyacinth Park.

Debbie James had two hits and drove in four runs as Bemisters beat Strathcona Stingers 12-3, and Tillicum scored three unearned runs in the third inning and went on to a 4-2 decision over Butler Brothers.

Market Square News downed Sooke 8-3 in a Lower Island Intermediate "B" Women's League game at Pemberton Park.

Levesque to torpedo constitutional change?

By AL FORREST

Canada won't get a new constitution as long as Rene Levesque is premier of Quebec, government adviser Marcel Belanger said today.

"How can you expect Levesque to negotiate a new constitution when he doesn't believe in it? It's like sending an atheist to negotiate renewed Christianity."

Belanger, former chairman of the Quebec Commission on Taxation, made the comments in an interview following a speech to the B.C. meeting of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants at The Empress.

Belanger, an accountant in Quebec City, is a past president of the CICA and a former Laval university professor.

He said Canada has a good chance of getting a new constitution within three years if Levesque is defeated in the provincial election, which will be held within a year.

"If he wins the election, it's finished.

"I want to choose my words carefully because this is a serious matter. I don't mean it will be the end of Canada but it will be a very dangerous time.

"We would have to wait another four years before beginning the constitutional negotiations.

"You can see how dangerous it would be for the future of Canada."

Belanger said the referendum on sovereignty association had been a traumatic experience for Canadians, especially those living in Quebec.

"I might wish bedbugs on my worst enemy but not a referendum."

Still, he said, the fear that Canada might break up could become a galvanizing force that would save the country.

Most Canadians now agreed a new constitution is a must.

At the same time, it would be counter-productive to rush into it.

After the defeat of Levesque, it would take about two years of earnest discussions to to complete the task, giving Canada a new constitution by 1982 or 1983.

Belanger said Prime Minister Trudeau should not try to set early deadlines for the negotiations.

He added that any idea Trudeau has of turning the clock back and restoring Canada to a highly-centralized form of government is "utopian dreaming."

In his speech, Belanger said the provinces would become increasingly powerful during the next 20 years at the expense of the federal government.

This increases the danger the country might become fragmented into 10 separate market areas, which would end Canada's chances of a specialized economy which in turn would hinder the nation's chances in the export markets.

To counter the trend towards regionalism, the new constitution would have to order the free flow of people and goods within the country.

For example, there would have to be a free movement of services, people and capital — in addition to the present laws for free movement of goods.

A free flow of capital, when ordered by law, would, for example, have prevented Premier Bill Bennett from stopping the sale of MacMillan Bloedel to Canadian Pacific Enterprises. Bennett had warned CP not to buy the B.C. forest giant because he did not want the headquarters moved out of Vancouver. CP headquarters is in Montreal.

Belanger said the new constitution must allow businesses to move freely within the country.

It must also allow the free movement of people. At the present time some provinces institute policies preventing people from outside their borders getting employment. This practice must be stopped by law.

Rules must also be changed, through a constitution, giving all Canadian companies a better chance to bid on work within each province.

He said Canadians would have to adjust to the new realities of strong regional governments but there must be a free flow of people and money within the country if the nation is to retain its identity and not become fragmented.

Belanger is a member of the Economic Council of Canada, an adviser to the Quebec government on economic and fiscal matters, president of Gagnon et Belanger Inc., management consultants, and partner in the chartered accountants firm Belanger, Dallaire, Gagnon and Associes.

The two-day B.C. conference of the CICA concludes Friday. Ronald W. Park of Vancouver, has been elected president of the provincial association.

Salt Spring's Valcourt raps 'Big Brother' CRD

Salt Spring Island regional director Yvette Valcourt said Wednesday she has been denied free access to information on health permits for development projects on the island.

She was supported by Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier who reminded the board George Orwell's 1984 has not arrived yet and the Capital Regional District cannot yet control thought.

Valcourt said executive director Dennis Young had refused to let her get copies of the information she requested.

Young said the board's solicitor had advised him the CRD "had a responsibility to maintain the third-party confidentiality."

He said if certain information was made available to a third party — a neighbor or business rival for example — the regional district could be liable for damages.

Valcourt, he said, had been told she could see the material but could not copy it. She could take brief notes.

Couvelier said he objected to "this compulsion to jump in and protect director Valcourt."

He said it was not the staff's business if Valcourt chose to abuse the privileges of office.

"It is up to the voters. It is not for us to suspect what may occur and frustrate her."

Couvelier stood his ground.

Young said his motivation was not to protect Valcourt but to protect the district.

Sidney mayor Norma Sealey noted that at the last meeting Valcourt had asked to see every piece of paper that dealt with Salt Spring Island matters. She said she had overheard Young explaining to Valcourt later this would be a nightmare to carry out.

Jim Waite, tree farm foreman

Icebox key to trees

MISSION (CP) — Out of the fridge and into the forest.

Basically, that's how they are growing trees in this municipality about 70 kilometres east of Vancouver.

Seeds are popped in and out of a fridge and are fooled into thinking they're in the midst of an icy B.C. winter. So they grow like crazy when they come out of the fridge into a warm greenhouse.

That's a simplified account of a technique which the local tree farm staff is using to grow yellow cedar and other varieties of evergreens.

The technique is so successful the survival rate of the farm's yellow cedar plantations is 95 to 100 per cent compared with the 50-per-cent survival rate of many high elevation plantations elsewhere in the province.

Mission has the only municipal tree farm licence in B.C. and at 930.78 hectares (23,000 acres), also is the smallest.

"It's a minute tree farm by comparison with the others in B.C." says manager Graeme Hynd.

But Hynd is convinced it is quality that matters in tree farms, and the farm's special quality is the high survival rate of its yellow cedar.

The breakthrough came in the mid-1970s when his tree farm predecessors started putting the seed in the fridge, Hynd says.

"The seed is put into the fridge at around freezing level for four months. Then it is taken out and put into germination trays filled with peat and a thin layer of gravel.

"The trays of seed stay in normal greenhouse conditions for about six weeks and maybe 10 per cent of them germinate. That replicates a summer. Then the whole tray is put back again into the fridge at freezing level to stimulate a high-elevation winter."

The trays of seed in the fridge are watched cautiously and at the first signs of further germination they are whipped out of the fridge and put into the greenhouse.

Machine-gun in bow of state police patrol launch in Venice symbolizes security for EEC meet

EEC summit to soothe U.S.

VENICE (AP) — Western Europe's leaders open a two-day conference in the splendor of this lagoon city today, determined to narrow their differences with the United States on major issues that threaten world peace.

The Red Brigades, Italy's most-feared urban guerrilla gang, has threatened to mount an offensive to disrupt the conference of the nine European Economic Community (EEC) heads of government.

As a result, extraordinary security measures have been mounted.

Combat-ready soldiers in armored personnel carriers guarded land approaches to the city and its Marco Polo airport which was closed to commercial traffic.

Machine-gun mounted coast guard launches patrolled the canals while police helicopters hovered overhead. Almost 10,000 paramilitary police reinforcements brought in from as far as Naples were deployed throughout the city.

The leaders of Belgium, Britain, Denmark, France, Italy, The Netherlands, Luxembourg, Ireland and West Germany are meeting in the 16th-century Benedictine monastery, adorned with Renaissance masterpieces.

The same site will be used for the Big Seven summit conference June 22-23.

A major point of contention between the United States and its European allies appeared to have fizzled after the EEC leaders backed away from a strong Middle East policy initiatives.

President Carter has strongly urged the Europeans not to introduce a new peace formula for fear of undermining the U.S.-sponsored Camp David talks between Egypt and Israel.

The White House announced on Wednesday that the stalled Egypt-Israel talks on Palestinian autonomy will resume shortly.

Diplomatic sources said the first draft of the European proposal would have called for the participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization in a comprehensive Middle East peace conference.

But on the eve of the conference, the sources said the European declaration being drafted will simply reaffirm the right of the Palestinians to self-determination and call for regular consultations between the EEC and the Arab League of which the PLO is a member.

It would also demand that Israel abandon its settlement policy, propose talks on the status of Israeli-occupied Jerusalem and urge all parties in the Middle East to renounce the use of force, the sources said.

Foreign crooners sap national will: Peking broadside

By BRYAN JOHNSON
The Globe and Mail

PEKING — The invasion of "decadent" foreign music has been a major cultural issue in China recently. But Wednesday it was boosted almost to the level of a national crisis — with ominous references to "national subjugation" and even a link to Adolf Hitler.

An outspoken article in the Peking Daily directly tied such music to Europe's appeasement of Hitler in the 1940s and also to the more recent appeasement trend in front of invasion and expansion exhibited by today's capitalist countries.

Such music can come only from a rotten society, argued the commentator, and it is quite dangerous to have this social situation if any enemy invades."

The article is only the latest official response to a growing obsession with foreign music among China's young people. The music, mostly love songs by female crooners from Taiwan and Hong Kong, is mild by the standards of North America but even the fleeting references to sex and a good time are considered scandalous here.

The flurry of newspaper articles, which began about a month ago, have included comments that such music "makes me want to throw up." Many commentators have expressed disgust at young girls shaking their legs or wriggling their buttocks in public parks.

* * *

Wednesday's article, complete with a stinging denunciation of a Western society gone soft and corrupt, was by far the strongest appeal yet to Chinese youth.

It painted a picture of the capitalist world having a rage of decadent music, millions of dope addicts, porno films and theft in the cities. And it quotes Western visitors to China admitting their people and youth have lost hope and confidence in the future of their countries.

The current "appeasement trend," apparently in the face of Soviet aggression, has its social root cause, says the commentator. He then goes on to explain that some countries during the Second World War "were annexed by Hitler in only a few scores of days because the ruling class pushed appeasement and the social situation was rotten."

The historical lesson still seems fresh," he concludes. "The rotten social situation in some capitalist countries deserves no admiration at all."

If that seems an extraordinary leap from a few tame Hong Kong love songs, it is apparently also light years away from the view of Chinese youth on the matter.

The Chinese authorities have seemingly been unable to control the flow of smuggled cassette tapes into the country — despite their enormous cost, which ranges up to half a month's pay ($15) for an ordinary worker.

Shanghai police recently claimed to have seized more than 1,000 of the tapes but they continue to be readily available on the black market all over China.

100,000 Indians homeless

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — Indian Home Minister Zail Singh has described six days of violence between Bangladeshi immigrants and tribesmen in the northeastern state of Tripura as an unprecedented massacre.

Official figures show that at least 315 people have been killed in a wave of anti-immigrant violence and about 100,000 have been made homeless.

Indian journalists in the area, from which foreigners have been banned, said the death toll is much higher.

He said he saw several houses on fire, and added that children were not spared in clashes between the two groups.

The tribesmen, reduced by the arrival of the immigrants to an ethnic, cultural and political minority, have used weapons ranging from bows and arrows to machine-guns.

The dead included five shot by police Wednesday after renewed clashes between tribesmen and immigrants, Tripura Chief Minister Nripen Chakraborty said.

Hundreds of houses in the state capital of Agartala and surrounding areas were burned after tribal militants launched a boycott of bazaars in their campaign against immigrants, who outnumber the local population by 3 to 1.

The minister told Parliament two days ago that it was time to chop off what he called the foreign hand helping to foment disorder.

The Hindustan Times, quoting reliable sources, said small arms have been smuggled into Tripura from abroad through the Bangladesh port of Chittagong.

The northeast states have several secessionist movements as well as an anti-immigrant campaign. In Assam, where agitation against immigrants started nine months ago, more than 130 people have been killed and 2,000 injured.

Olympic stamp value soars after withdrawal

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Special stamps issued by the Postal Service last September commemorating the 1980 summer Olympics have skyrocketed in value since local post offices were ordered to halt sales three months ago.

A 15-cent stamp now brings as much as $1 at private dealers. Prices for other stamps and items in the series, have also soared as dealers, speculators and collectors have rushed to acquire the banned items.

Postmaster General William F. Bolger withdrew 21 commemorative items, including six stamps, from the market March 11 in support of President Carter's boycott of the Summer Olympics in Moscow.

Normally the printing and release of several hundred million stamps would preclude any scarcity, but Bolger's order touched off an unprecedented stampede to stamp counters.

"People started running after them even though the fundamentals aren't there to make them valuable," Robert Williams, a Washington-area stamp dealer, said. "There was immediate speculation in the items, which probably will lose some people a lot of money."

The flurry of buying and selling prompted concern in philatelic circles about artifically inflated prices, possible price gouging and behind-the-counter trading by some dealers. There also has been some fear of a black market in the stamps.

The soaring prices and surging sales have also caught the eye of Postmaster General Bolger, who did not anticipate the rush for the stamps that followed his edict.

He told a stamp trade paper recently that he was disturbed by reports of profiteering, and warned that if the situation grew worse, he would simply "flood the market" with the unused stamps.

Rebels attack Cambodia train

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (UPI) — Cambodian rebels ambushed a packed train and mowed down hundreds of passengers in the most spectacular attack of their month-old offensive against the Hanoi-backed Phnom Penh regime, survivors said today.

They said between 150 and 200 people were killed in the daylight attack Tuesday near Srok Ek Romeas, 42 miles northwest of the capital.

At least 200 wounded, most in serious condition, were brought to Phnom Penh's already overburdened hospitals and doctors appealed for tents to shelter the overflow. More than 100 others who suffered lighter injuries were taken to clinics in the provincial capital of Kompong Chhnang.

The 70-car train was carrying an estimated 8,000 passengers, mostly black market traders returning to Phnom Penh from buying sprees along the Thai frontier.

Witnesses said the traders were jammed inside the boxcars and also covered the outside of the wagons "like flies, so thick you could hardly see the train."

Survivors said a band of 10 guerrillas, apparently rebels loyal to deposed Khmer Rouge Chief Pol Pot, disabled the train by blasting the boiler of its steam locomotive with B-40 rockets. The engine burst into flames, killing both engineers and dozens of people riding the lead car.

The rebels then began spraying those perched atop the cars with machine guns and used their bayonets against those who tried to flee.

The firing continued for several minutes while another group of rebels rolled up to the scene in oxcarts and forced the traders to hand over their goods.

The guerrillas fled, one woman survivor said, when a combined force of Cambodian and Vietnamese army troops arrived at the scene.

The Vietnamese-installed government of President Heng Samrin has consistently denied there are any Pol Pot guerrillas operating inside Cambodia.

IRA plants car bomb

BELFAST (UPI) — A large car bomb exploded today in the centre of a village south of Belfast, destroying six houses and damaging every building in the center of town.

No one was reported injured in the explosion in Markethill, 40 miles south of Belfast.

Afghanistan rebels using poison gas, Russians say

Times News Services

Rebels fighting the Soviet presence in Afghanistan have apparently stepped up use of poison gas and other toxins and these are harming the local population, Afghan government and Soviet reports from Kabul say.

Kabul Radio, monitored by the BBC, said 488 schoolchildren were taken to hospitals Wednesday after schools were polluted with "toxic substances."

In Moscow, the English-language service of Soviet Radio said 150 people in Kabul were taken to hospital after attacks by rebels using what it termed "war gas."

What one report described as the "poisonings" — representing the latest rash of campus sabotage — were believed to be connected with the worsening political rift that threatens to unseat the Soviet-installed government of Babrak Karmal.

A common theory on the poisonings was that anti-Soviet resistance workers want students away from the schools to prevent them being used as spies and propaganda agents by the government.

Afghan specialists also reported multiple assassinations of members of the rival Khalq and Parcham factions of the Communist Party, as well as Soviet civilians in Kabul, Kandahar in the south, Herat in the west and Mazarisharif in the north.

Reports reaching Pakistan from Western diplomats in the Afghan capital said the city's defences have been greatly strengthened, and artillery fire and bombing were heard most nights on the outskirts of the city.

In Washington, the U.S. state department said Moscow television told viewers that letters are circulating in Kabul calling for a general strike against the Karmel government.

A state department spokesman commented: "The Soviets have finally begun to admit to the Soviet people that there is a depth of resistance to the Karmal regime which they have not admitted previously."

He said there is official speculation in the United States that "more elaborate preparations" by the Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan to deal with the rebels may be delayed until after the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow.

Pryor's lawyer adds rum to coke talk

SHERMAN OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Two doctors treating comedian Richard Pryor denied Wednesday that the 39-year-old Emmy and Grammy winner told them he had been using an inflammable mixture of ether and cocaine known as "free base"when he was engulfed in flames and critically burned.

Pryor's attorney, meanwhile, said the comedian had told him that he was burned when a glass of rum ignited when he lit a cigarette.

The police said they stood by their account.

Pryor was still on the critical list Wednesday night with third-degree burns over the upper half of his body.

Old Blue Eyes aids Chrysler

DETROIT (AP) — For $1 a year — and a bet on the company's future — Frank Sinatra has agreed to act as a commercial spokesman for Chrysler Corp., the automaker said Wednesday.

The company said Sinatra had asked what he could do to help Chrysler survive and quoted the entertainer as saying: "I was impressed with (Chairman Lee A.) Iacocca's personal crusade to save Chrysler Corp. and to protect American jobs."

Details remain to be worked out, but Iacocca said Sinatra will get an arrangement similar to his own — "a dollar a year plus a good financial return if we make it work."

Chrysler lost more than $1 billion last year, is trying to recover with the aid of $1.5 billion in federal loan guarantees.

Sinatra, 65, rarely does commercials.

A Chrysler spokesman said Iacocca and Sinatra had known each other casually before Sinatra's offer and had never been engaged in any enterprise together.

Probers humbled in hunt for hum

BRISTOL, England (AP) — Eight investigators using sensitive listening equipment admitted defeat Wednesday in their effort to find the source of the so-called Bristol hum, a mysterious nocturnal noise that has puzzled and infuriated citizens for two years.

The experts were called in by the city council April 14 to carry out an all-night hunt for the noise that plagues four scattered parts of the city, 188 kilometres southwest of London.

After exhaustive tests with sophisticated tape machines placed around the city, the experts declared themselves baffled as to where the noise is coming from and said they are unable to stop it.

The Bristol hum has meant sleepless nights for tens of thousands of residents and prompted outlandish theories on its origin, ranging from Martian spaceships to Russian radiowaves.

Barnett says it is even a potential health hazard because gives many people headaches.

The experts say the noise may come from a motorway that runs through the city, or aircraft on a flight path to the north, or Bristol's industry which includes giant chemical and aerospace factories and a large Rolls Royce aero engine plant.

Overthrow-Khomeini plot smashed

Times News Services

TEHRAN — A plot to overthrow the regime of Ayatollah Khomeini has been discovered in the Iranian armed forces and its leaders will go on trial next week, the government radio reported today.

The radio announced the arrest of the group which was code-named "Overthrow" but gave no details other than to say the plotters would be tried next week.

The Tehran Radio broadcast announced the smashing of the anti-government plot as a Foreign Ministry spokesman said two Iraqi embassy diplomats were arrested in Tehran Tuesday while "delivering documents."

The arrested diplomats, who were not identified, were handed over to the Foreign Ministry, which ordered them to leave the country, the radio said.

There was no immediate hint as to whether the two incidents were related.

It said that following the Iraqis' arrest, the Baghdad authorities ordered two Iranian diplomats to leave Iraq, but arrested them and beat them up before they could do so.

Two revolutionary guards were killed in renewed fighting between Iranian and Iraqi forces Wednesday at Shalamcheh, near the southwestern port city of Khorramshahr, Pars news agency reported. Another two Iranians, members of the Gendarmerie, were injured in the clash. The region was calm today.

While not directly calling for the Americans' release, Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who supports a diplomatic settlement of the crisis, this week again warned that an espionage trial would have negative consequence for Iran.

Moslem fundamentalists, who control the parliament and are headed by Bani-Sadr's arch-rival, Ayatollah Beheshti, have indicated they favor spy trials.

A powerful member of Iran's parliament, Khosrow Qashqai, was jailed for two days recently because revolutionaries interpreted a captured document as proof of his links to the CIA.

Bani-Sadr said the document was misread and warned that it and others could be used to weaken the revolution.

But a purge of suspected "agents" of the United States and the deposed shah is being carried out largely on the basis of dossiers of prominent Iranians found in the embassy's poltical section.

In another development, U.S. officials said Wednesday that the United States was considering taking the hostage issue back to the United Nations.

Meanwhile, in Oslo, Norway, Iran's Foreigm Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh renewed his private dialogue with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, reportedly discussing ways of resolving the deadlock over the American hostages who spent their 222nd day in captivity in Iran today.

Initial reports indicated the meeting, in a hotel during the night, may have been more successful than the meetings Ghotbzadeh held with Kreisky and other socialist leaders in Tehran last month. Ghotbzadeh is attending a meeting of the Socialist International in the Norwegian capital.

Kreisky was the only Western leader to visit Iran since the hostage crisis began.

Kurdish rebels blew up a major highway bridge Wednesday and an armed group fired a rocket that set fire to an oil depot in renewed violence in a troubled area of western Iran.

Iran's interior minister said "a large number" of people have been killed in recent clashes between Iranian army troops and Kurdish groups in the western region.

Khadafy calls halt to killing Libyan exiles

BEIRUT (Reuter) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy has ordered his revolutionary committees around the world to stop the assassination of Libyan exiles opposed to his government, said the official Libyan news agency, JANA.

His comments were reported only hours after two Libyans were shot in separate incidents in Italy. One of them was killed but the other survived.

At least eight Libyans have been killed in Western European cities since Khadafy warned exiles to return home by Wednesday or face death.

The agency said Khadafy told a student gathering that he has urged revolutionary committees throughout the world "to stop all commando campaigns in all parts of the world and end the carrying out of death sentences against exiles, except those who are convicted by the revolutionary court."

But he described those who have dealings with Israel, Egypt and the United States as traitors who deserve to die.

"Those who deal with these three countries commit high treason and deserve to die, wherever they may be," he was quoted as saying.

The Libyan killed in Milan was identified as 56-year-old Azedin Lahderi from Tripoli. He lived in the northern Italian town of Bolzano and was on his way home from Zurich when he was shot in Milan's central railway station.

Earlier, in a Rome street, a Libyan screaming "Khadafy, Khadafy" shot and wounded a compatriot in the buttocks. Police later detained a man in the incident in which Mohamed Saad Bjget, 33, from Benghazi was wounded.

Gunmen meet grisly deaths in Guatemala

GUATEMALA CITY (UPI) — Angry Guatemalan students tortured one man for two hours and set another's nude body on fire, killing both for allegedly trying to assassinate a prominent student leader, police in Guatemala City said.

Police said Wednesday that three unidentified gunmen tried to assassinate Victor M. Valvert, former secretary of the University Students Association, as he left San Carlos Autonomous University in the capital.

Valvert was hit by three bullets but survived the attack late Tuesday.

Students in classrooms heard the gunshots, ran from their buildings and captured two of the three gunmen, police said. The third escaped.

They dragged one gunman into a classroom and tortured him for two hours until he allegedly confessed to participating in at least 10 slayings and of being a government security agent, police said. He was shot with his own revolver.

The second gunman was stripped naked and dragged through the campus, where he was doused with gasoline and set on fire.

Students and teachers at San Carlos University have been the target of dozens of attacks in recent months that apparently have been carried out by rightists who consider the campus a center of leftist "subversion."

A spokesman for President Romeo Lucas Garcia denied leftist charges that the military-supported government condoned — if it did not support — rightist terrorism.

The Guatemalan armed forces denied either of the gunmen belonged to any official security force and said it would investigate the killings.

France withdraws police from revolt-torn islands

PORT VILA, New Hebrides (AP) — France announced today it will withdraw its special riot police from the revolt-torn New Hebrides, saying the situation has eased. But the islands' chief minister, Walter Lini, said he will try to get the decision reversed.

There was no immediate reaction from Britain, which had been preparing to send commandos to join the French in a "scare operation" against rebellious New Hebrides natives, including cultists who worship Prince Philip and believe a Second World War U.S. soldier named John Frum is the Messiah.

About 200 Marine commandos were to leave Britian Friday aboard three VC-10 jet transports and seven C-130 Hercules jets, arriving Saturday following refuelling stops in the United States, Canada and Fiji, 800 kilometres west of here.

Both the British and French forces were to be based in Port Vila, and the British and French commissioners from the two-power condominium which has governed the islands since 1904 had said they hoped their presence would be enough to scare the natives into ending the revolt.

Fifty-five French riot police, dressed in combat fatigues and carrying rifles, sub-machine-guns and field radios, flew in here Wednesday from nearby island of New Caledonia.

They arrived hours after hundreds of cultists on the island of Tanna, who believe their U.S. soldier god will ascend from a volcano bringing them refrigerators, radios and other worldly goods, attacked government offices in a second attempt to seize the island. One man was killed in the ensuing gunfight with government supporters, the first casualty of the 16-day rebellion.

The 72-island archipelago is scheduled to gain independence July 30 but in London Wednesday, British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington warned the move may be postponed because of the ongoing "insurrection."

The rebellion began May 28 when natives on Tanna and on the island of Espiritu Santo, 500 km to the north, attacked government offices, kidnapped police and freed prisoners from jails.

While the initial attack on Tanna failed, the one on Espiritu Santo succeeded — and Jimmy Stevens, the separatist leader there, declared the island independent.

Stevens is supported by U.S. businessmen allied with a group called the Phoenix Foundation, which is trying to set up a tax haven free of government control on the island.

Chinese bishop set free

PEKING (Reuter) — Bishop Deng Yiming of Canton, better known as Msgr. Dominic Tang, has been released from jail more than 22 years after he was arrested on charges of counter-revolutionary activity in 1958.

Canton's Yangcheng Evening News said Bishop Deng, whom it described as the former Roman Catholic bishop of Canton, was released last Monday.

He is believed to be the first Catholic bishop among Chinese clergymen jailed in the 1950s to be set free.

The Chinese Catholic Church was forced to break with Rome in 1957 in order to survive under the Communists. A government-backed Patriotic Catholic Association was set up and China began appointing its own bishops independent of the Vatican.

He was accused of having prevented young Catholics from joining Chinese "volunteer" units to fight in the Korean War.

Msgr. Deng was also alleged to have threatened Catholics who joined the Patriotic Catholic Association with excommunication.

Last Monday's Yangcheng Evening News, which became available in Peking tonight, said he had been arrested by order of the Canton public prosecutor's office but made no mention of whether he was tried or what his sentence was.

It said Bishop Deng has repented of his crimes and had undergone re-education.

"Under the education of the people's government, Deng Yiming has admitted his guilt, his attitude is passable and he has shown himself willing to repent and mend his ways," the evening newspaper said.

"Now the Canton people's public prosecutor's office has decided to give clemency to Deng Yiming.

Although Bishop Deng was described as a former bishop, he remains a prelate in the eyes of the Vatican despite the fact that the Patriotic Catholic Association now appoints its own bishops of Canton and has replaced him.

The Chinese government has recently allowed religions, including the state-backed Catholic group, to resume activities after more than a decade of suppression from the Cultural Revolution up to Mao Tse-tung's death in 1976.

The bidding:

Opening lead — queen of spades.

There was not much rhyme or reason for South's six diamond bid — he had already spoken his piece, and then some, when he jumped to two notrump. Five diamonds would have been fully adequate.

But players sometimes get lucky, even when they misbid their hands, and South had more than his fair share of luck here. To begin with, West led a spade. Had West led the ace and another heart, the slam would have failed ignominiously — but he didn't and thereby hangs this tale.

South took the spade lead with the ace and observed that there were two apparently inevitable heart losers. An early and successful club finesse would allow him to discard one of dummy's hearts — but would then, unfortunately, leave him with two heart losers in each hand. However, South also noted that there was a legitimate chance to make the slam if he delayed the club finesse until later on.

So, after a round of trumps, he played a spade to the king, ruffed a spade, led a trump to the jack, and ruffed dummy's last spade. He then cashed dummy's remaining trumps, producing this position:

Declarer now led the club jack and overtook it with the queen. The finesse succeeding, South next played the jack of hearts.

There was no defense against this rare type of endplay. If West won, he would have to concede the last two tricks to dummy; if East won, he would have to concede the last two tricks to declarer.

West squirms over OPEC's latest price parry

The Associated Press

Western governments on Wednesday assailed a decision by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries allowing crude oil prices to rise as much as $4 U.S. a barrel.

"Any price rise at this time is completely unjustified in view of market conditions," U.S. Energy Secretary Charles Duncan said in Washington after OPEC oil ministers ended a three-day meeting in Algeria.

New oil price increase, on top of a more than 100 per cent increase since the beginning of 1979, will be "a further considerable burden for the world economy," said Guido Brunner, energy commissioner of the European Economic Community.

Brunner said any increase will worsen "the tendencies toward recession and inflation."

In Tokyo, Haruo Mayekawa, governor of the Bank of Japan, said the OPEC decision would raise Japanese prices and increase the country's trade deficit, which reached $1.9 billion in April. Japan is almost totally dependent on imported oil to meet its energy needs.

Among OPEC states announcing increases were Venezuela, the largest supplier of imported oil to Canada, which is raising prices between $1 and $2 a 35-gallon barrel July 1.

An increase of $1 (U.S.) for a barrel of imported oil would, if passed on to the Canadian consumer, increase the price of gasoline nine-tenths of a cent a litre or 4.2 cents an imperial gallon. However, the Canadian government subsidizes imported oil, which is more expensive than domestic oil.

The two-day OPEC talks ended before dawn Wednesday with release of a joint communique setting a ceiling of $32 a barrel for Arabian Gulf and other medium-quality crude and $37 for higher-quality, low-sulphur oil.

The "compromise" agreement is viewed as cosmetic since it allows individual OPEC countries to wait as long as they want before bringing their prices in line with the $32 minimum.

Saudi Arabia, the cartel's largest producer, said it will not increase its $28-a-barrel price at present. Saudi Oil Minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani suggested in Algiers the kingdom might raise prices $1 or $2 a barrel if the current world oil surplus diminishes.

The oil ministers recommended cutting OPEC's 28 million barrels-a-day output by two million barrels, on top of a two-million-barrel-a-day reduction since late 1979. But the Saudis, whose output of 9.5 million barrels a day is a third of OPEC production, refused to go along because the meeting was unable to agree on a unified price structure.

Yamani said a unified price structure would have compelled his country to reduce production to 8.5 million barrels a day, the amount Saudi Arabia produced before a shortfall in world markets caused by the Iranian upheaval.

The price of Saudi Arabian oil, which in the past has been the cartel's base price, has risen 109 per cent since January, 1979, and 56 per cent since last July. Other OPEC producers have imposed even bigger increases.

The ministers also adopted a $37-a-barrel ceiling, which is approximately the top price already charged by several OPEC states.

OPEC hawks, like Iran, have been pressing Saudi Arabia to reduce production to prevent a glut on world markets that might drive down prices. Yamani has predicted an oil price collapse later this year because of an oil surplus.

Killer bees becoming sweeter

BRASILIA (AP) — A British scientist working in Brazil has a honey of a report for a world humming with bad news and ready for the worst. The Brazilian killer bees are losing their punch.

Prof. Anthony Raw, a bee specialist at the University of Brasilia, says there is little danger posed by the angry, deadly bees that have spread throughout Brazil for more than 20 years.

The insect is an aggressive variety of honey bee from Africa that has been breeding with the honey bees of South America. The result is an Africanized bee, a short-tempered insect prone to swarming.

The bee produces more honey than its European cousin, introduced in the Western Hemisphere 200 years ago and responsible for most commercial honey.

Raw, who has been studying bees and honey production for eight years, says he never has encountered problems with Africanized varieties.

"They're known for being a bad-tempered bee," says Raw, who has collected more than 300 species of bees in central Brazil. "In Africa, everybody knows that you just don't get too close to these bees. And I don't think anybody should be calling them killer bees; they should be called Africanized bees."

The source of the bee trouble goes back to 1956, when a Brazilian entomologist imported some of the African bees. His aim was to breed a new variety, less aggressive than the African bees but to maintain their most desirable quality — high honey production. An employee at his laboratory inadvertently opened the special hives and released some of the African bees.

By the early 1970s, officials said about 300 persons had been killed by the bees, which were gradually expanding their territory northward.

Dr. Benjamin Spock, 77-year-old baby doctor turned anti-nuclear activist, paid his $25 fine in Little Rock — the penalty for blocking the entrance to the Pentagon at an April 28 demonstration. And while he spends most of his time now trying to alert the public to the danger of nuclear arms proliferation, he concedes it may be a good thing that the public doesn't wake up. Says he, "The trouble is people can't imagine nuclear extinction. People keep blinders on. If we were aware of all the danger in the world, we'd all have nervous breakdowns in a couple of weeks."

Mental hospital employee John White, who was fired for allegedly stealing a state banana and peeling it in front of a kitchen worker, has been reinstated. "The hearing officer said it wasn't proved beyond a reasonable doubt that he stole a state banana," said Roger Parkin of the Maine State Employees Association, who appealed White's dismissal. A woman kitchen worker at the Augusta Mental Health Institute claimed White, a supervisor there, stole a banana from a patient's tray, peeled it and said, 'Now prove I stole it,'" Parkin said. Another employee at the hospital was recently fired for eating a state french fry.

Dear Abby:

We may be moving into another home soon. It's a lovely home, but one thing bothers me — a lot. The former owner had lung cancer and spent the last six years of his life in that house before he died.

I know that cancer isn't supposed to be "catching," but I can't help wondering if there isn't a possibility of contracting the disease from whatever conditions caused the cancer — perhaps within the house itself?

Reader

Dear Reader:

Cancer is not contagious and your fears are groundless.

Dear Abby:

What is the matter with women? They roll up their hair in big curlers, then they snarl it and spray it with glue! Then they take half an hour to paint their faces, and for what? When their husbands pull them closer for a little kiss or squeeze, they say, "Please, Henry, you'll mess my hair," or "Don't kiss me, you'll smear my makeup."

Bill

Dear Bill:

Dear Abby:

Recently our family stayed in a very nice motel overnight, and we ordered food from room service.

Before checking out, my mom insisted on washing the dishes. I say that we paid for the room and that includes any dishes we dirtied when we ordered from room service. Who is right?

Judy

Dear Judy:

Your mom is a super-neat lady in every sense of the word, but motel guests are not expected to wash their own dishes.

Dear Abby:

My son who is getting married soon informed me today that my husband and I are not invited to the wedding breakfast to be given by the bride's parents. The reason (we are told) is that costs must be kept to a minimum. My two other children, a boy and a girl, will both be attending as they are in the wedding party.

My son also informed me that as the groom's parents we are responsible for the rehearsal dinner, and we must include the bride's parents. What is your opinion of this?

Hurt

Dear Hurt:

The parents of the groom should be included in all the wedding festivities, just as the parents of the bride should be. If the bride's parents are not aware that this is so, they should be so informed.

Bert's the king of TV dinners

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It was a boast and a bit of a misunderstanding that got Bert Dodd on the air with his own television show, the popular Senior Chef series which mixes nutritious recipes with advice to keep active.

"I think it was about 1971," says Dodd. The new health department information officer was having coffee with colleagues when nutritionist Pat Wolczak mentioned an idea for a cooking show aimed at the elderly.

"I like cooking. Ever since I was a kid. Nothing gourmet, but I've always liked to cook."

He went off on a holiday shortly afterwards, and returned to find a letter from the deputy minister thanking him for agreeing to do the show.

"I was a little bit hesitant at first," he said. But Dodd went ahead and accepted the role of "senior chef." He gives all the credit to Wolczak and executive consultant Jan Ayer for their work over the years.

The program has become a popular video attraction, first with just a local following of seniors. Later other Canadians tuned in the dignified-looking but casual gent with the pots and pans and sensible talk on eating right. Now younger people are beginning to take an interest. The advice on the show could apply to any age group.

What began as a 10-minute segment on the The Ida Clarkson Show in 1972 has become an interesing half-hour program in its own right.

Currently, Dodd is involved in the taping of the fourth 13-program series — incidentally the first television programs made in the new production centre in the basement of the Richard Blanshard building, headquarters of the health department at Blanshard and Pandora.

Dodd was only posing as a senior citizen in the earlier programs, taking time from his job as chief of audiovisual services in the health ministry department but he's a real senior now, having retired in January.

The Times recently watched rehearsals and taping of one program on the set, an inviting mockup of a kitchen with a sunny view out the window to an orchard — just a poster blowup on the studio wall.

"They're really a much better dessert than those rich baked desserts which are loaded with calories and really little else."

The program also includes hints on fruit juices — and it doesn't shy away from naming products which are nutritionally valuless — and how to store them.

"You should always keep the juice in the refrigerator in a covered container," he says.

Heat and air destroy the vitamin C, the most fragile of nutrients. In a container in the fridge, it should be good for five days.

"Look for the word 'unsweetened'," he advises. Avoid the sugary fruit drink crystals and canned orange drink — you want the real juice, says Dodd.

The Senior Chef is more than just a cooking show. The simple nutritious dishes Bert Dodd makes on air are only part of the prescription. On every show he encourages his viewers to keep active and get plenty of exercise. The message is that health in old age is more than just eating well.

One segment of an upcoming program has Dodd showing viewers around the garden of his Brentwood Bay home in spring. On another program, he visits a senior citizens centre where members are busy at handicrafts.

"He has quite a following," says Gloria White, chief producer of the series. She's a former CBC Toronto executive who has welded together a diverse crew of technicians from CHEK and Victoria Cablevision to work on the show this spring.

As far as she knows it's the only cooking show for seniors where nutrition is the guiding theme.

It has branched out from a 10-minute segment on CHEK to cross-Canada exposure and White says the program may be shown in the U.S.

The Senior Chef has already been shown on the prairies and the CBC station in Moncton plans to show it next season.

The program gets lots of mail from viewers and welcomes questions and comments. Usually each program deals with a viewer's query on some nutritional matter.

A 48-page cookbook is also available for the asking. Either phone 388-4421 in Victoria or write: Caputal Regional District, Nutrition Office, 524 Yates Street, Victoria, V8W 2S6.

Cataract removal very seldom urgent

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

One of my eyes is developing a cataract. I have excellent vision in my other eye. Is there an urgent need to have the cataract removed? I'm 66 years old and I manage very well.

Mr. E.S.S.

Dear Mr. S.:

When you say "urgent" I must ask if an eye surgeon has made the recommendation of an operation at this time. If the suggestion has not been made, there is obviously no reason for urgency.

In most instances, there is no need to have a cataract removed if vision is still good in the other eye. This statement does not hold if there are any complications from an overripe cataract, or the development of glaucoma. Also, people in special occupations sometimes need the use of both eyes for their work. Then, of course, the cataract in the one eye is surgically removed.

The delicacy of the decision for any eye operation makes it necessary for every case to be considered individually.

Dear Doctor:

I have heard about a method of helping people with arteriosclerosis. It is called "chelation." I have not been able to find any reading matter on this subject. Can you direct me to it and perhaps tell me if it is an accepted form of treatment?

Mr. D.A.

Dear Mr. A.:

Chelation therapy has been in use for about 40 years. Without getting too involved in scientific terms, it is essentially a method by which certain poisons or toxic substances can be eliminated from the body with specific drugs.

It was first used on people who were suffering from lead poisoning. The drug, sodium citrate, was found to be effective in removing lead from body tissue. Later, this idea was translated into the possibility of eliminating calcium from the body.

Since calcium and calcium plaques play such an important role in arteriosclerosis, it was thought that chelation therapy should be tried.

A chelating agent, disodium edetate (EDTA), was used in an effort to improve circulation by stopping the arteriosclerotic process.

This work has not yet been completely substantiated. Nevertheless, a vast amount of ongoing research is in progress all over the world. For it is believed that the study of chelation may open wide and important avenues in the treatment of the many and diffuse problems occurring in various organs of the body.

'No' to children means security

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Children need structure in their lives, says Lonnie Carton, a child psychologist who believes saying no to them at the right time in the right way can help them achieve a sense of security and love.

"Saying no can mean that the parent really cares," says Carton, a member of Tufts University faculty, writer and lecturer who also conducts a radio show.

Positive noes can help youth to grow, learn self-discipline and acquire social responsibility, says the mother of three and author of a new book Raise Your Kids Right.

There are four noes that parents can and should rely on, she says:

— The lifesaving no. Explain consequences of dangerous actions calmly. Scare tactics can inhibit a child's outgoing nature while caution and self-discipline can be inculcated by reasoning on the child's level of comprehension.

— The challenge no. "It's too hard for you," amended to "but you can try it," is a strategy to stimulate creativity and responsive effort to strive and achieve.

— The character-building no. It sets parameters for conduct. Children need guidelines in their lives to be more selfless and sharing. No can be a powerful tool when used fairly, firmly, consistently and lovingly.

— The convenience no. It reminds the child that parents and teachers cannot drop everything and put the child's own interests ahead of adult priorities. There's a right time for everything.

On the other hand, Carton cautions, there are three noes that can leave psychological scars that inhibit personal development.

They are: No, I don't love you; no, you're not capable, and no, I won't listen to you.

SHEILA DE VITO, 28, helps her husband Ben with his daily therapy in a fight back from paralysis caused by someone at a party who put drain cleaner in his beer in April. The 23-year-old former welder has been on a waiting list for eight months to be assessed for possible vocational rehabilitation that might lead to new job skills. Waiting for help has demoralized De Vito because the couple has to live on welfare, said his wife. The Canada Employment Centre won't deal with him until he goes through the rehabilitation process. Shopping wisely boosts nutrition

Second of two parts

Nutritional requirements, food preferences and consumption habits change throughout our life. We know a great deal about what's bsst for infants, what an active teenager should eat, the special requirements for pregnant women and so on. But, special nutritional requirements for the elderly are just beginning to be of intersst . . . but, more particularly, a concern, as we discover many of our elderly are malnourished.

It's an inescapable fact of life. We all age . . . some of us at a faster rate than others. For example, as we get older, ths cells that make up our muscle mass decrease in number. At 80 years of age, only 50 per cent of muscle cells remain which causes a reduction in muscle size and strength. There's also a decrease in the number of heart cells. It's also thought that the Basal Metabolic Rate (the energy required for living) drops some 16 per cent between 30 and 70 years of age. This means that our calorie requirement drops as we age because of this slowing down of the metabolism (and lack of exercise).

Our perceptual ability also changes with age. Of special importance to our eating habits are the gradual changes in haaring, taste, smell and, of course, eyesight. If there is a loss of haring, many elderly people don't want to eat out or attend social functions because they are embarrassed about not being able to hear what is being said. As we age, we seem to require brighter lights (dining in dark candlelit rooms becomes a real problem!). Taste and smell change with age. The number of taste buds decline beginning in middle life. Taste buds that detect sweet and salt are the first to go. This leaves behind the ones that detect bitter and sour. This, coupled with a loss of a sense of smell, would mean that some vegetables (like green peppers) would taste bitter.

All those factors, combined with difficulty in shopping, physical disabilities such as arthritis, (which makes it difficult to cut food), ill-fitting dentures due perhaps to a weight loss, lower incomes and so on, are all factors which contribute to the growing numbers of our elderly who are simply undernourished. Yet, some are over-nourished — for they are taking in too manyckalories and then obesity becomes another health hazard.

What advice can we give tm one of our most important resources — our senior citizens — about shopping wisely for foods and nutrition? Not an easy tak but here are a few suggestions from Agriculture Canada:

— Plan meals ahead. Keep Canada's Food Guide in mind and include from the basic groups daily. Make your shopping list as complete as possible.

— Shop with a friend and share two large containers of food or fresh produce such as a large head of lettuce. and shop when you're in good spirits — not when you're hungry or tired.

— Don't hesitate to ask the butcher to repackage meat into smaller portions if the packages on display don't suit your needs. You can do the same thing for fresh fruit and vegetables.

— Convenience foods such as TV dinners and canned stews can be nourishing. They're more expensive but easy to prepare and they cut down on leftovers.

— Skim-milk powder is both economical and nutritious. Reconstitute the powder into fluid milk for drinking or use it in baking.

— Buy fresh fruit and vegetables in season. That's when they're usually good buys.

— Buy only what you can carry safely. You can always go back for seconds when you feel up to it.

— If chewing is a problem, don't rely totally on baby foods. Try fish, eggs, cheese, peanut butter, cooked vegetables, stews made with minced meat, soups, some cereals, ice cream, canned fruit.

— Vitamin supplements are generally not necessary unless prescribed by your doctor. Include green and leafy vegetables, meat, cereals and a milk source each day and you will obtain the nutrients you need.

You'll find more hints on wise buying in the publication "Shopping for Food and Nutrition." For a free copy, write to Information Services, Agriculture Canada, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0C7. Or, write for another free publication, "Questions Seniors Ask About Food and Nutrition," General Foods, Limited, P.O. Box 4019, Station A, Toronto, Ontario, M5W 1J6.

Bell tips parents of non-breathers

BARBOURSVILLE, W.Va. (AP) — Kitty Cooper dreads the sound of bells in the night because they may be a signal that her 13-month-old son has stopped breathing again.

"The first time it happened, he was just four weeks old," Mrs. Cooper said recently. "It was my anniversary and, thank God, I hadn't drunk too much champagne."

That night she was restless and decided to check on Alex, her new baby.

"I reached over to his crib, he sleeps right next to us, and felt him. He felt like he wasn't breathing, but I thought it was just my imagination. So I put my finger under his nose and still couldn't feel anything. Then I turned him over and saw that he was blue."

She woke her husband, Bob, but he was unable to clear away the mucous that had formed in the baby's throat. They took Alex to the hospital and on the way, she said, the baby began breathing again.

Had he not awakened, the Coopers were told, their son probably would have been a victim of the so-called "sudden-infant-death syndrome" that annually claims 7,000 infants in the United States.

Since that first episode, Mrs. Cooper said, her son has stopped breathing at least 50 times. Now when he does, the Coopers are advised by a bell on a monitoring device they attach to Alex whenever they put him in his crib.

The device, featuring an electrode attached to the child's body, is set to sound the alarm if his breathing or heartbeat stops for as long as 20 seconds.

"We started out at 10 seconds and eventually will go to 25 seconds," Mrs. Cooper said. "At first, my son would stop breathing two or three times a day. Then, it was once a week. Now, he stops about every two months."

When he does, the Coopers must stimulate him to get him awake and breathing again. They tickle, pinch, or slap him, if necessary.

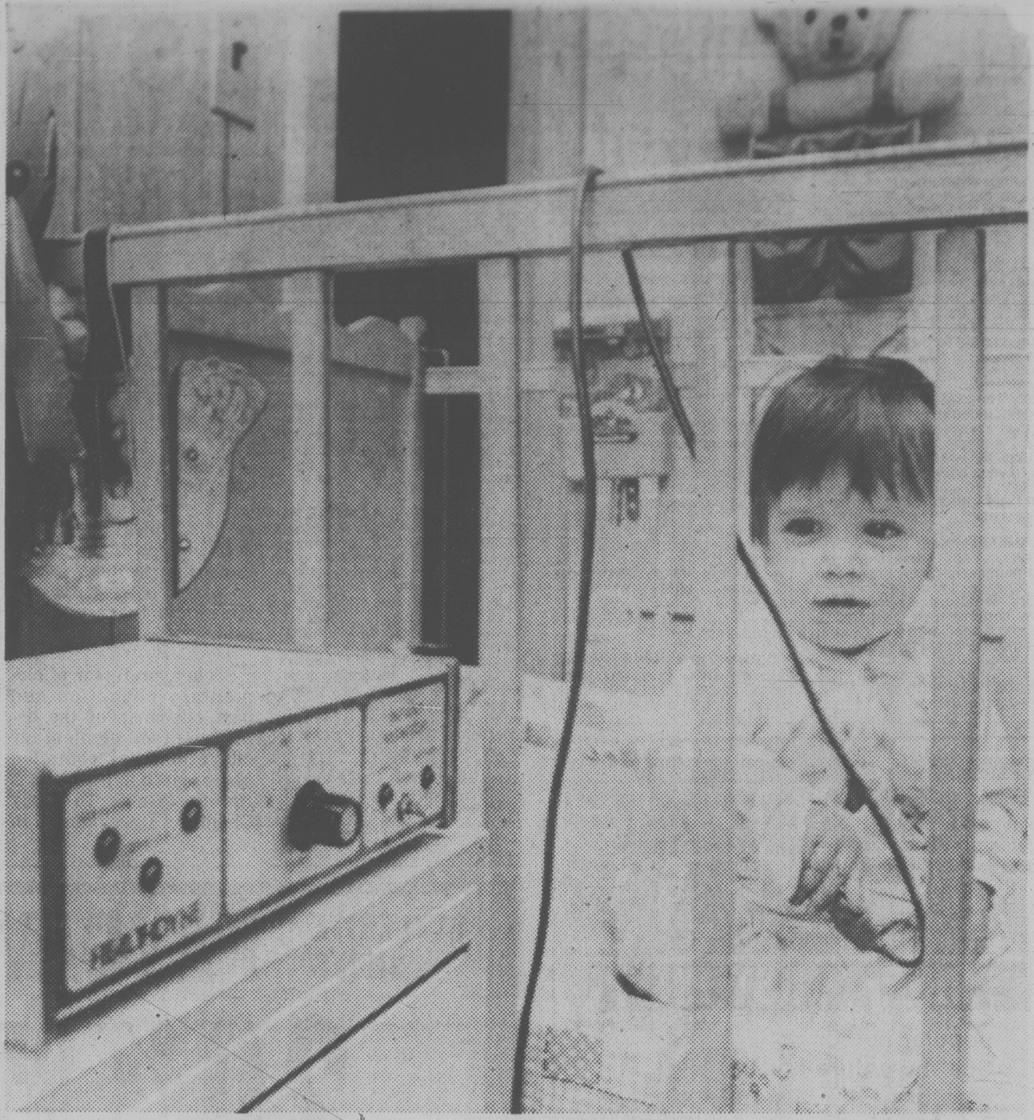
The child suffers from apnea, or cessation of breathing. The critical stage is usually during the first 18 months.

"It's caused by an immature brain stem," said Mrs. Cooper, who has become something of an expert on the problem. "The children literally go to sleep so soundly that they forget to breathe. By the time they're 18 months old the brain stem usually has matured."

For the first two weeks after their son's initial attack, the Coopers took turns staying up with him at night. Several weeks ago, several mothers of similarly afflicted children formed a regional support group. Kitty Cooper was elected president.

"We're growing fast," she said.

Members are working with Cabell-Huntington Hospital to get a monitoring device, which sells for $1,500 and rents for $150 a month, to be loaned free of charge to low-income families. They also keep up with the latest developments, and give each other sympathetic support.



Alex Cooper has electronic friend to monitor his sleep-time breathing

Sheer force of will needed by fat teens

CALGARY (CP) — Teenage obesity is a vicious circle that shapes not only the bodies but the lives of young people.

Breaking free of the circle means changing personality by sheer force of will, which is tough at any time but even harder for teenagers, already beset by a host of pressures.

"The less good you feel about yourself, the less you are likely to do about your physical appearance," says Jo Sandkuhl, physiotherapist with the Alberta Children's Hospital in Calgary.

Change comes hard for fat teenagers, she says. They're young and would find it easy to get physically fit: "But whether the child can do this on a psychological basis is another question."

A weight problem can stem either from a medical disorder or lifestyle. Either way, the inactivity and eating habits can turn what was dismissed as baby fat into a serious weight problem.

Parents sometimes unwittingly fuel a teenager's feelings of inadequacy, says Sandkuhl. A classic example is the parent who says: "If you would only lose a few pounds, you would be so attractive."

"That little word 'if' or 'you would be' — that means you aren't now," she says. "That just throws people deeper into the sugars and starches and the solace they find in food."

But De Filippi is careful not to blame parents, who she says are "trying very hard to help their victims of a society-wide prejudice.

"Society puts a lot of pressure on people to look like movie stars and have slim builds, and that's unfortunate because the vast majority of people just aren't like that."

'Our big enemy here is the television," says Sandkuhl. "It's far, far easier to sit down in front of the TV and watch someone doing whatever than to do it yourself."

S is for super (market) idea

PROVO, Utah (AP) — If kids can learn from television's Sesame Street show that C is for cookie, then why not take them to the supermarket where they can learn that O is for orange juice or B is for bread?

Floyd Sucher, educational specialist at Brigham Young University, believes the local grocery store could be one of the most valuable learning centres in the community for preschoolers.

"The typical supermarket contains about 10,000 items that you can use as an excellent resource for first-hand teaching," he said.

Sucher, professor of elementary education and past chairman of the department of elementary education, has compiled his research into a book, A Parent's Guide To Early Childhood Development In The Supermarket, to be published this year.

It is his theory that weekly trips to the supermarket, if properly structured with education goals, can enhance a child's ability to read, write, think and even to learn moral principles.

"If parents go through and name and discuss all the products in a grocery store, the child's vocabulary would expand automatically," Sucher said.

Corn is one item that Sucher suggests in his book as a starting point for teaching multiple principles. Under the area of concept formation, a child would learn that corn is used for many probucts — muffins, tacos, corn flakes, margarine, cereal — and that it can be purchased frozen, canned or fresh.

With a few ears of corn serving as a teaching tool, the child can see and feel its texture and be taught where it comes from and how it grows.

To develop auditory perceptions of letter sounds, the parent can point out other products that begin with the letter C, such as carrots or cranberries, Sucher said.

This principle can be reinforced at home with a "sound box" — where several objects that begin with the same letter sound are placed in a box, or sometimes mixed with objects that are dissimilar, so the child learns to distinguish differences.

Math skills can be learned when the corn is weighed and when it is paid for at the checkout counter.

"A child can do some rather high levels of thinking in the process of analysing, and then eventually synthesizing the way things are put together. There is no place quite like a supermarket where you can go and teach all these concepts.

"Children can also be taught to look for similar geometric shapes, to identify similar letters, to match upper- and lower-case letters and even to learn about different occupations."

They can at the same time be taught not to steal and that they are individually responsible for damaging products in the store, he said.

Sucher has been using his supermarket education method for 15 years and has taught it in some of his early childhood education classes at the university.

Cocky Locky not so lucky

WYNARD, Sask. (CP) — Cocky Locky, winner of last year's Canadian championship chicken chariot race, has gone to the deep freeze as he waits to become somebody's dinner. Owner Terry Tomblin says he has another good-looking rooster ready for this year's event, in which chickens, harnessed to tiny chariots, race on a four-lane, 15-metre course.

Music felt in breast

BURLINGTON, Ont. (CP) — Maureen Scarlett dances to music she cannot hear and only the sense of the beat on her breastbone keeps her in step.

Yet she has had an exciting career in ballet and jazz — travelling in the United States and Europe to perform for celebrities such as Eunice Kennedy Shriver, actress Elizabeth Taylor-Warner, baseball star Hank Aaron and Watergate Judge John Sirica.

In Denmark, she danced for Princess Benedikte and made a government-sponsored dance film. She has also appeared with the New York City Ballet Company under choreographer Richard Wise.

When she performs, Scarlett, 23, can see but not hear the applause of the audience. She can feel the excitement even though she can't hear the thunderous ovation.

Scarlett is a recent graduate of Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., the only institute in North America offering degrees for the deaf.

It was at Gallaudet that Scarlett joined an interpretative dance class which incorporated sign language into dance routines. Under the direction of physical education teacher Peter Wisher, Scarlett and three other deaf students were soon dancing ballet and jazz.

Her own handicap was not discovered until she was four years old because she had taught herself to lip read.

Scarlett's parents were determined their daughter would lead a normal life and after grade 6 she attended regular schools in this community near Hamilton.

There were some teachers, she says, who didn't even realize she was deaf.

"I used to be very shy in school," Scarlett said. "I barely said a word.

"As lip readers only understand 40 per cent of what you say, I had to stay up many nights studying by myself. I had to learn in a hearing environment and study only with my eyes."

After high school, Scarlett decided to go to university. But there are no degree-granting colleges for the deaf in Canada and one of her instructors suggested she should become a key-punch operator because the noise wouldn't bother her.

At Gallaudet, however, she found herself in a different world. "I used to be ashamed of my handicap and I tried to hide myself away."

"But once I got to Gallaudet, I realized that I was not the only one."

"At Gallaudet, they believe in total communication," she said. "That means lip reading, oral communication and sign language."

Last December, Scarlett graduated with a bachelor of science degree and she hopes to pursue a masters degree and teach preschool deaf children.

"When I received my degree I was proud," Scarlett said. "In many ways I was proud to be deaf."

Too many drugs problem to aged

EDMONTON (CP) — Drugs prescribed by doctors may be at the root of one-third of all psychological or medical problems in the aged, Dr. David Skelton, medical director of Edmonton's newest hospital, said Wednesday.

Skelton, in charge of Youville Memorial, said patients shouldn't need more than four medications at once.

"But we see patients on much higher amounts, and that means drug interaction problems," he told a psychogeriatric workshop at Alberta Hospital.

While 18 per cent of geriatric patients who take four medications or less don't get sick on their drugs, almost all become ill when the number of medications rise, Skelton said.

Penalties to ease for pot possession

OTTAWA (CP) — Justice Minister Jean Chretien said Wednesday the government will introduce legislation within a few weeks to change penalties for the possession of marijuana.

Chretien also said in the Commons the government may change the law which means those convicted of importing marijuana get a minimum seven years in prison. It is one of the laws in the Criminal Code where a minimum sentence must be imposed.

The minister was responding to Bud Cullen, Liberal MP for Sarnia, who said sentencing in such cases should be left to the discretion of the courts.

The justice minister said the government had promised in the speech from the throne opening Parliament in April to remove criminal penalties for simple possession of marijuana.

"I hope to do so a few weeks from now," he said, adding that legislation now is being studied by cabinet.

The throne speech pledge was the latest in a series of promises in the last eight years to lighten penalties for soft drug offences. But all initiatives have stalled, often because of the government's unwillingness to stir up those opposed to such changes.

A bill introduced by the Liberals in 1974 but not passed would have removed cannabis — marijuana and hashish — offences from the Narcotics Control Act and placed it, along with hallucinogenic drugs like LSD and speed, under the Food and Drug Act.

Simple possession for personal use would no longer be a criminal offence, but possession for the purpose of trafficking and importing would still be a crime.

In recent years, about 90 per cent of convictions under current laws were for simple possession.

National still Nash's says court

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario Court of Appeal decision Wednesday re-affirmed anchorman Knowlton Nash's right to read the news on CBC's The National.

The court dismissed an appeal by the Canadian Union of Publc Employees to review a labor arbitrator award 16 months ago upholding Nash's appointment to the job.

Union lawyer Mel Myers said Nash's appointment in November, 1978, violated the terms of the collective agreement because he was not a staff announcer.

The three judges deliberated 10 minutes before reaching the unanimous decision that they could not interfere with the arbitrator's decision.

Town levelled, month in jail

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — An impaired driver whose car crashed into a gas line and caused an explosion that levelled a large part of the town of Essex on Feb. 14 was sentenced Wednesday to 30 days in jail.

Ronald Beutler, 26, of Essex pleaded guilty May 13 to impaired driving, but sentencing had been delayed while Judge Harry Momotiuk weighed the offence against its consequences.

The blast caused an estimated $6 million damage in the town, 25 kilometres southeast of Windsor. Six buidings were destroyed and 75 others in a five-block area were damaged.

A number of people were injured, including Beutler's brother who was severely burned and later had one hand amputated.

Provincial court was told a breath-analysis test showed Beutler had three times the legally-acceptable limit of alcohol in his blood at the time of the accident.

Momotiuk said that although injury, death and property damage were a likely consequence of Beutler's drunkeness, the extent of damage from the accident could not have been predicted.

Momotiuk said two factors in Beutler's favor were that he was a first offender and that his driving, observed by a policeman before the accident, was not particularly dangerous.

The Criminal Code permits a maximum fine of $2,000 and a maximum jail term of six months or both for impaired driving.

Munro close-mouthed about 'fall in shower'

OTTAWA (CP) — Indian Affairs Minister John Munro attended a cabinet meeting today with a broken and badly swollen jaw that aides say was caused when he fell in the shower Sunday.

"You guys are rotten, you know that," he told television cameramen and photographers through clenched teeth as he entered the cabinet room.

Asked how he felt, Munro replied that he feels great.

"I'd feel a lot better if I didn't have a broken jaw," he mumbled.

Munro, 49, was released from Hamilton General Hospital Wednesday; he had been under treatment since Sunday.

An aide said Wednesday he could not confirm or deny reports that Munro's jaw was broken in a beating.

Munro's family doctor said the minister was suffering from the flu when he slipped in the shower.

The aide had been told by Munro's Hamilton office that he was suffering from the flu and he did not find out about the broken jaw until Tuesday.

Cuban refugees arrive

TORONTO (CP) — Isabella Fernandez left her son and her job in Havana and endured eight days without eating or washing to be among 34 Cuban refugees who landed at Toronto International Airport on Wednesday.

The refugees, among 10,500 Cubans who crowded into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana in April in a bid for political asylum, were the first of up to 300 refugees the Canadian government has agreed to accept. Thirty-five more are expected next week.

After a seven-hour flight — from San Jose, Costa Rica, to Mexico City to Toronto — the refugees had their personal papers stamped by immigration officials and became landed immigrants, permanent residents of Canada.

They are mainly young blue-collar workers, classified by Canadian immigration officials as skilled and semi-skilled, with few possessions and little money.

Jets carrying enough reserve fuel, say pilots

TORONTO (CP) — A Canadian Airline Pilots spokesman has denied Air Canada and CP Air jets are flying with only 15 minutes reserve fuel.

Capt. Norman Foster, an Air Canada pilot, said Wednesday the statement, made by the president of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, is incorrect.

Foster said the airlines are meeting federal government requirements and carry a minimum of 30 minutes reserve fuel.

He said pilots have the authority to take on more fuel if they feel weather conditions or other factors, such as air traffic congestion, warrants it.

Ottawa officials acknowledged a breakdown in communications between Transport Canada and air traffic controllers resulted in controllers not knowing about special fuel provisions granted Air Canada and CP Air in 1972.

George Capern, vice-president of operations for the Air Transport Association of Canada, said fuel provisions are being met and are safe. He said a recent incident in Calgary involving an Air Canada jet which requested landing priority because of low fuel demonstrates a breakdown in communication between controllers and Transport Canada.

The air traffic controller filed an infraction report against the pilot because he thought the jet was not carrying enough fuel even though the Boeing 747 met federal fuel regulations.

Constitution deadline far from a consensus

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau's setting of a September deadline for major agreements on constitutional reform was rejected as expedient, unfortunate and destructive by provincial premiers Wednesday.

Their remarks cast doubt on a statement by the prime minister in the Commons that it was the "consensus" of a private meeting of first ministers Monday that September be considered a deadline for agreement on all or most of 12 key constitutional issues.

Instead of fretting about those issues, the federal government should be concentrating more on making Canada energy self-sufficient, Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed said.

Besides expressing skepticism over the satisfactory conclusion of talks on a new national oil-pricing agreement, Lougheed said the federal government doesn't seem interested in making Canada energy self-sufficient during the next decade.

In a speech to about 550 members of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce and at a later news conference, he said it would be a tragedy if Canada missed this opportunity — an opportunity few other nations have.

"I pray I'm wrong."

Lougheed said he would like to see the existing constitution respected, particularly in the area of provincial rights, before worrying about possible changes.

Lougheed said he was concerned with the federal government's attitude on the issue of a new oil-pricing agreement.

"The negotiations to this date have created in my mind a situation I do not consider optimistic to success," he told reporters.

"I don't know what motivates the prime minister to use these negative, destructive words of failure," said New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield, referring to Trudeau threats of unilateral action by the federal government on constitutional reform.

"He should be devoting his attention to trying to find resolutions (to problems) and be in a position to bargain rather than being so cavalierly pessimistic."

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque suggested that unilateral action would be a ticklish situation, using an expression in French that literally translates as "throwing the devil among the cows." And Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan attacked Levesque for not being tough enough in defending Quebec's traditional constitutional demands.

Saskatchewan Premier Allan Blakeney said unilateral action by the federal government would break the pace of negotiatons to rewrite the 1867 British North America Act which now forms the basis of the country's constitution.

Bill Bennett, premier of British Columbia, said it would "not be a disaster" if there is no resolution by September.

Only Ontario Premier William Davis, who previously has urged Trudeau to act unilaterally to transfer the constitution as well as the right to amend it to Canada, seemed to go along with Trudeau.

While not commenting directly on Trudeau's remarks, he agreed that if the premiers can't reach agreement, Trudeau will have to act on his own.

Trudeau has suggested he might hold a national referendum on the constitution, but Blakeney said Wednesday the issues are too complex for a referendum or any series of separate votes.

He said a referendum on the constitution "would set up a national confrontation like we've never see before in the history of this country."

Justice Minister Jean Chretien, who did not attend the meeting Monday, repeated Trudeau's remark that the premiers had agreed to a September deadline.

The premiers agreed that federal and provincial ministers and officials will hold extensive negotiations throughout the summer on key issues.

Computers collar future job market

TORONTO (CP) — Uncontrolled advances in computer technology will wipe out millions of jobs, threatening social and economic disaster by 1990, a California electronics expert says.

But factory workers are better off than office workers, he warned. Osborne said that widespread use of small personal computers in the home will eliminate many white-collar jobs before the end of the decade.

Before Osborne spoke, other speakers told the seminar that life in the electronic age will be better because Canada's electronics industry will get its share of the coming prosperity.

Graves team wins bridge tournament

TORONTO (CP) — A team led by Allan Graves of Vancouver defeated the Frank Markotich team of Toronto with a score of 249 international match points to 83 to win the Canadian bridge team championship Wednesday night.

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian locations, named after John Cabot, should be changed to conform with the explorer's original Italian name, says Peter Bosa, former chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism. Place names using the anglicized version of Cabot's name should conform with his actual name, Giovanni Caboto, says Bosa.

Canadian in thrilling escape after year as hostage in Iran

NORTH HATLEY, Que. (CP) — Canadian businessman Douglas Browning has escaped from Iran after a year of what he describes as "forced labor" for the revolutionary government of Ayatollah Khomeini.

Aided by sympathetic Europeans and Iranians, he gave his watchers the slip in Tehran and made his way to a southern port where one moonlit night he found himself desperately running down a beach past soldiers' guardhouses.

Browning, who returned quietly to this village 150 kilometres east of Montreal on May 26, was considered a commercial, not a political hostage, due to the bankruptcy of his former employers.

He had worked since 1974 for now-defunct Stadler-Hurter Ltd. on a $700-million paper mill development the Montreal firm was building for an Iranian government company on the Caspian Sea coast in northern Iran.

Stadler-Hurter, claiming it was owed $33 million by the Iranian government, declared bankruptcy early last year at almost the same time the former shah was overthrown.

Iranian officials clung to the letter of the contract, however, insisting that the Canadian firm maintain an official representative on the job site. As the last Stadler-Hurter employee in the country, Browning was refused an exit visa, placed under close surveillance and forced to work.

His escape was engineered by European businessmen, whose plans were tried and aborted three times because of unexpected countryside and gunboat patrols.

"Cheer up, Doug," said the voice at the other end of the line. "We should finish our meetings in a week . . . we're ready to pack it all in."

"Everything was set. The only thing left for me to do was to lay a plan of deception so that I wouldn't be missed in Tehran while I travelled to the escape port on the Persian Gulf."

The next day, Browning was invited to dinner by a European businessman who handed him a forged Iranian identity card and several items of clothing that would identify him to other contacts.

The first contact called again, "inviting" him to go to the port the next day. "He didn't say which port, so the monitors must have thought this was my friend in Gilan calling. What he was telling me was to head to the Persian Gulf the following morning."

He bought an Iran Air ticket to the designated gulf port at a travel agency the next day, using his phoney ID and faking an accent. He boarded the flight with nothing but a flight bag, his Canadian passport and a 10-month old ticket to Europe.

The man followed him at a few paces until they reached his car. They then drove together to a safe house on the gulf, where they spent the evening and most of the night.

"He told me that when it got dark enough, I would start my trek down the beach. I was to run along the hard sand near the water. If a patrol caught me I was either to give myself up or get shot. There was no returning to the safe house."

Browning donned a pair of black pants, a black jacket and a hood to cover his light hair, then tore up the fake ID card so it would not be traced to his friends. As he ran out the back door to the ocean, the contact created a diversion at the front of the house.

"I ran along the coast and just looked straight ahead. I knew there were guardhouses to the left of me, but I ran past them as though they didn't exist."

By morning he had landed in a Persian Gulf kingdom. But he still wasn't free.

Had he tried to leave the kingdom on an international flight, authorities would have noticed that his passport lacked an Iranian exit visa and they would probably have returned him to Iran.

At the airport he bought a ticket for a nearby gulf country. He then telephoned a Canadian external affairs official, asking him to contact the airline that had issued his ticket to Europe and arrange for an official to process the ticket in the international lounge of the airport at his next destination.

Turning to the gawking officials, he yelled: "My buddy . . . he went that way . . . gotta go . . . OK?"

Browning disappeared into the crowd and boarded the plane without being followed. A few hours after landing, an airline official came to validate his ticket in the lounge.

Interest rate dip forecast

OTTAWA (CP) — The Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada predicts that mortgage rates probably will fall slightly by the end of 1980.

Rates for five-year closed mortgages have already dropped to about 13 per cent from levels of 16 per cent or higher earlier this spring.

The association's economic research committee said Wednesday that further reductions in the next six months would likely amount to another one-quarter or one-half of a percentage point.

Although the rates have fallen in recent weeks, they remain higher than in past years and have put the cost of buying a house beyond the reach of the average consumer, he said.

The association has proposed a mortgage assistance plan which would use federal subsidies to reduce the effective rate of interest for home-buyers and stimulate housing construction indirectly.

If this requirement isn't met, he said, the result could be increased demand for those houses that are available and higher prices generally for home buyers.

Housing Minister Paul Cosgrove said last week that a proposal to help the housing construction industry has gone to cabinet and predicted approval of the plan by the end of June.

The association also is lobbying for the return of capital costs allowances in apartment construction and for the retention of indexing of personal exemptions for income tax purposes.

Meanwhile, the president of the Mercantile Bank of Canada predicts interest rates will fall below 10 per cent by the second quarter of 1981, Robert Davidson said in an interview in London, Ont. that rates will continue to drop because of a low demand for loans and a lack of courage by consumers and businessmen.

Davidson said people are putting off major purchases because of economic instability, a situation he predicted will continue for a long time. Business must learn to cope by being more flexible.

Explosions rock town on PEI

MONTAGUE, P.E.I. (CP) — Seven persons were injured today in a series of explosions and a spectacular fire in a large building on Main Street in Montague, 45 kilometres east of Charlottetown.

A spokesman for Kings County Memorial Hospital in Montague said three people were admitted and are reported in satisfactory condition. The others were treated but not admitted.

He said there were no known fatalities.

Flames were shooting 15-20 metres skyward when firemen arrived about 11 a.m. to find people climbing out windows from upstairs apartments. A pizza parlour and a wool and yarn shop occupied the ground floor.

The blaze was under control in about one hour but firemen continued to pour water on smoking rubble, all that remained of the building.

Luke Champion, the town postmaster, was one of the first on the scene. He said one wall of the building fell on a parked car but the fire did not start until after a second and third explosions, minutes after the first.

Parents accept enrolment boost

Willows Elementary School parents Wednesday went along with an administrative plan to accommodate higher enrolment expected in September.

Proposals do not affect children now enrolled at Willows, whether or not they live within the school boundary or belong to either the English program or French immersion.

About 80 parents attended a meeting in the school to hear and ask questions about the proposal outlined by assistant superintendent Bernie Chandler. By a show of hands, 45 parents voted for the proposal that would see a reduction in French immersion kindergarten enrolment and four additional classrooms by 1982.

When one parent questioned the vote, only those from the Willows boundary area were asked to raise their hands. The vote then went 27-19 in favor of the plan.

Besides a check on new enrolment and more classroom space, the plan will provide a new French immersion kindergarten, probably at Oaklands, and the administration will prepare guidelines for assigning pupils to French immersion programs on a district basis.

The Willows boundary will be closed to pupils living outside it who may wish to be enrolled in the regular English program.

Chandler said classroom space at Willows will be enlarged by enclosing part of the open area for one room, using one kindergarten room and one portable building for 1980-81. A second portable would be added the following year.

He said this would result in a constant averge number of pupils per classroom. Maximum class size would be 29, the smallest 20.

Enrolment in the regular program at Willows in the next five years is expected to rise from 413 to 488, Chandler said. The French program will go from 200 to 253, and total enrolment from 672 to 741.

The school board's planning committee will deal with parent reaction at its meeting Friday before the subject goes back to trustees for decision.

Most teacher layoffs from secondary level

About one-quarter of the 40-teacher staff reduction needed by School District 61 next term will covered by retirements, resignations and leaves of absence, administrator Glenn Wall said today.

The remaining 30 will be cut mainly from secondary grade levels, where expected enrolment will be 850 pupils less than this year.

They will be teachers employed on temporary contracts, which are signed on a year-to-year basis.

A further reduction of teaching staff is expected in 1981, when enrolments will likely fall by another 700 children, Wall expects. But because the staff will be smaller to begin with, it will more difficult to lay off another 40 teachers.

By then the problem may be eased by the fact that secondary teachers will have had two summers to retrain as elementary teachers, who will still be in demand.

Country music now No.2

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (UPI) — Break out the banjos and fiddles — country music sales have surpassed pop music and pulled into second place behind rock n' roll for the first time in history.

While record company executives in the music hubs of New York and Los Angeles were worrying about losing their jobs because of a sales slump this year, officials in Nashville were clinking champagne glasses.

Figures released Thursday by the New Jersey-based National Association of Recording Merchandisers show that country not only enjoyed gross sales of $437 million last year — a $10 million jump over 1978 — but outstripped pop, disco and soul record sales.

The increase in country music sales was in sharp contrast to a generally gloomy picture of the record industry in 1979. Gross sales dropped by more than $505 million, nearly 12 percent, to $3.7 billion from 1978 to 1979.

The NARM study shows that last year, 37.4 percent of the record buying public purchased rock 'n' roll records; 11.9 percent bought country and 11.3 percent preferred pop. Coming in fourth was soul music, up 1.5 percent from 1978, followed by disco, which gained only .2 percent in sales.

Children ignored by CBC?

By JUDY CREIGHTON

TORONTO (CP) — The chairman of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission has criticized the CBC television network for abdicating its responsibility to children in the after-school and Saturday morning programming periods.

John Meisel, in an address Wednesday to the Children's Broadcast Institute, said that although Canadian network programming has a long, distinguished record of service to pre-schoolers, its programming for older children in after-school hours has not been as good.

"The late afternoon period is regularly filled with adult reruns and family programming," he said. "No one should minimize the difficulties posed by programming to older children because by the age of 6 or 7, most kids have graduated to adult television fare.

He said the CTV production Kidstuff, which was aimed at children eight to 12 years of age, received 500 letters a week dealing with problems and needs specific to the pre-adolescent. The program is no longer on the air.

"Given this evidence, how does family programming and reruns of All in the Family satisfy the needs of this audience?"

He said the age group needs an entertaining children's series.

"The absence of such programming creates a gap which no collection of disparate programs, however excellent, is able to fill.

"Children, like the rest of us, rely heavily on a sense of order and stability. Series programming for children can go a long way to meeting these needs on a daily basis."

On a typical weekday, the CBC Toronto station offers children a talk show from 3 to 4 p.m.; an occult panel show from 4 to 4:30; a rerun of All in the Family from 4:30 to 5; another rerun — The Beachcombers — from 5 to 5:30 and at 5:30 Mary Tyler Moore, also a rerun.

In Ottawa, CBC president Al Johnson said the CBC can't deliver more Canadian content without more federal money and air time.

Johnson, whose network has an annual budget of $522 million, said he would like to increase programming for the 6-to-18 age group. He added that Meisel has stated only one of several CBC objectives.

"We need more Canadian drama and theatre, more regional programming and better coverage of remote communities," he said. "In the last five years we have had a real reduction of 1.7 per cent of our over-all budget when we are operating a French and English network for only slightly more than the Public Broadcasting System in the United States.

MEISEL . . . adult reruns rapped

To provide more Canadian programming, Johnson said more money is required.

He said the CBC needs more air time and that he wants to start CBC-2, which will provide extra prime-time commercial-free television in 1981 if the CRTC approves the network.

Meisel said it is likely that one of the reasons children's needs are not being consistently met is a conflict between program creation and program delivery that is inherent in broadcasting.

"It is not as if the talent does not exist. All across the country, at the local and network level, in the National Film Board, children's theatres and community colleges, gifted people are willing to invest their creative energy in production for children's television.

"Why is it that their spirits are dampened and their talents diverted into other production areas?

"Is it acceptable to us that a national network will turn down a program of quality on the basis that its cost is higher than that of the cheapest alternative? What does this say about the place and priority of our children in our society?"

He said children's programming on European television shows, "very little of the overstimulation, violence or general shoddiness which so often mars children's programs on American radio and television."

"There is also an adequate provision of appropriate progams at most suitable hours. Particularly in Eastern Europe, we see an attitude toward this work which is very different from the one that prevails on this continent."

Eastern European broadcasting is non-commercial, but it is also "authoritarian and may be propagandistic — features that we reject."

Eastern European artistic traditions in theatre, dance, puppetry and folk culture combine to provide material that delights and instructs children.

garden notes

I have noticed over the years that one of the nicest things about gardening and having friends and neighbors who are interested in the same hobby is the gardeners' propensity for sharing the good things from their gardens.

For example I was always amazed at the number of gift seeds Times readers sent my father when he was writing this column. These gift seeds ranged from the exotic to the common, all very appealing and obviously lovingly gathered by proud gardeners from their favorite plants. In fact, it is difficult to imagine a more unique gift.

Amongst the many seeds that came his way in this manner were trillium, camellia, tomato and lettuce from Germany, new Zealand watercress and flax, a grey squash from Oregon. Someone even sent him seeds from an "unknown" plant in Malawi.

In many instances, these gift seeds from Times readers would come with most interesting descriptions of how they had originally come upon the plants and of their experiences in growing them.

Some of these good people didn't actually know what kind of seed they were sending. They just knew it was something nice. The seed might be labelled mysteriously with some description like, "Wild vine — very pretty" or "Pink flower, good in rural flower beds where watering is not always possible."

One envelope that particularly intrigues me is full of wild cucumber seeds. I have not grown these but understand they run rampant in certain areas. The wild cucumber (Echinocystis) apparently is a very quick-growing vine, often reaching 20 feet, and is useful for quick covering. The flowers are small, white and in elongated flower clusters. The fruits are puffy and papery.

On our new property to which we moved just a year ago, I have set up a special experimental garden plot to try out all these delightful items. And to add to it, there are now many new gift seeds sent to me this spring and I can hardly wait to find out what mysteries will unfold as the season progresses.

In the fall I will be writing some columns describing how all these seeds turned out. One batch of seeds that is special to me is a variety I shall have to call "David's spinach."

David is a young fellow of 10 years who has grown a special type of spinach whose seeds were given to his mother. Apparently, this is a spinach plant that keeps producing throughout the season and rarely goes to seed. Here on the island it is also perennial. And, no, it's not Swiss chard.

The fact that David gave up some of his precious seeds to me makes this gift very special and I shall certanly have more to say about his spinach before the season is over. And, by the way, it's good to know that not all 10-year-old youngsters have been brainwashed into believing that spinach is yucky.

One lady sent a large quantity of the most delicious dried beans. We cooked some, as she suggested, jut with water, and served them seasoned with salt, pepper and butter — with lamb.

These are called flageolet beans, not often seen in seed catalogues. I have ssen them in only one as a matter of fact, an organic garden catalogue from Oregon. I shall certainly be growing some of these gift seeds for more of these delicious treats which proved such a hit in our family.

Another lady sent, not seeds, but two Hawaiian Air Plant leaves. These leaves can be pinned to a curtain or laid flat on top of soil to sprout new little plants along the edges of the leaves.

I promptly set my new leaves on top of pots of soil, and waited. Just when I thought, from the look of the leaves, that I had murdered them, there came new little whorls of leaf along the edges of the original leaves. Soon they will be ready to plant in pots of their own, in cactus soil, and like the others I'll be reporting in due course upon their progress.

In tomorrow's column, I'll be telling you about some of the other seeds and ideas readers have been sending me.

Many rooms for the falls

NIAGARA FALLS (CP) — Most of the $6.3 million being spent on new construction this year in the city's downtown core will go towards the development of high-rise motor hotels, says Ray Thompson, president of the Niagara Resort and Tourist Association. The expansion of tourist accommodations brings the city's total to 7,000 rooms.

Patients drugged to save staff?

A factory atmosphere exists in many B.C. long-term care facilities with patients being drugged for the convenience of the staff, says the Hospital Employees Union.

Union secretary-business manager Jack Gerow said today in a news release the overuse of drugs is only one of several complaints employees have about the staffing and care provided in such facilities.

He said the union, snubbed by a government group studying long-term care, will conduct its own probe of the situation.

"Our members have concerns about patient care which we fear will not be addressed by the government study," he said.

He said Assistant Deputy Health Minister Isabel Kelly turned down the union's request to participate in the government's steering committee on long-term care.

The request was denied, he said, despite the fact that the committee was ostensibly set up to include groups with demonstrated interests in the long-term care program.

Gerow said in meetings called to tackle the problem of inadequate staffing and patient care HEU members have deplored what they call the factory atmosphere in many nursing homes and private hospitals.

Some of their complaints include the following:

— Patients being drugged to reduce the need for the staff to spend time with them;

— "Activation programs" which amount to wheeling the patient in front of a television set to sit for hours;

— Dirty patients covered with bedsores;

— Union funds or in some cases employees' own money being used to buy craft supplies or holiday treats for patients because no other funds were available.

"Members are also concerned that staff are too busy to encourage residents to participate in actitivities that are available or to help them to exercise properly to avoid further deterioration of their condition," Gerow said.

He added that while HEU members realize some long-term care facilities are providing decent care, "they feel that there is a vast difference between the intent and the reality of the long-term care program in some nursing homes and private hospitals."

Gerow said the union hopes to have a report prepared for the government in four to six months.

Taxman tackles fishing industry

OTTAWA (CP) — Revenue Minister William Rompkey says his department has started an assessment of the fishing industry on both coasts to see how incomes are earned and spent.

The minister told reporters Wednesday the government obviously will prosecute any tax evaders turned up in the assessment, but officials are not specifically looking for wrongdoing.

The government is particularly concerned at reports of large cash deals, which are made by fishermen at sea and the fact that all of these may not be declared.

Each year the department selected a few industries for assessment and this year was the fishing industry's turn.

The minister said his officials will take a random sampling of individual fishermen and fishing companies, with emphasis on the latter.

The officials will look at records to "see what is happening in terms of taxes."

He added that the fishing industry now is becoming relatively prosperous because of the new 200-mile fishing limit and because of government policies.

"Thank God that fishermen have income on which they can pay taxes," he said.

Revenue officials, with assistance from small business experts, also planned to give some advice to fishermen on their financial operations.

"Fishermen now . . . are small businessmen and they now have to act as small businessmen."

The officials will assess the entire structure of the industry — following the fish from the water to the can.

WEST VANCOUVER (CP) — Nothing is sacred these days — including the garbage of this wealthy Vancouver suburb.

Consequently, residents have set up an impromptu Neighborhood Watch to ensure their trash is not stolen.

Residents are participating in an experimental curbside recycling program to convert pre-sorted glass, metals and newspapers into reduced garbage pick-up bills and a longer lifespan for landfill garbage dumps.

But garbage thieves have been ripping off the best of the recyclable items to make a little profit for themselves and more work for police.

The going rates for recycled materals are $35 a short (2,000 pounds) ton for glass; $45 a short ton for metals and $35 a long (2,240 pounds) ton for newspapers.

After explaining the recycling program, Tansley said the man felt bad about his action and put back all the buckets.

The month-old program's apparent success indicates West Vancouver wants to show the way in conservation among B.C. municipalities, said Ald. Don Lanskail, head of the municipal recycling project.

Bruce Culver, president of New Life Recycling which picks up the recyclables, says his large van is filled twice each collection day from the 1,300 homes in the test area.

Culver says his staff has been carefully schooled about being discreet about the neighborhood's drinking habits.

"There's no going down the street shouting: 'Wow, look at all those gin bottles,'" he said.

Mayor overreacted in police dispute

By
LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The Essential Services Disputes Act won't be used to force Saanich police officers back to work as relief dispatchers on the communications desk, assistant deputy labor minister Doug Cameron said today.

He said Couvelier should not have asked cabinet to order police officers to relieve civilian communications staff.

"I think the escalation of the issue to the ESDA is extending it beyond the bounds of its perimeter," Cameron said.

Couvelier's request indicates he misunderstands a collective agreement in effect between the police board and the Saanich Police Association, he said.

The agreement is in full force and there is no prospect of a strike or lockout by the union.

Meanwhile, Couvelier announced at noon today he has sent a telegram to the Labor Relations Board office in Vancouver requesting a hearing Friday morning in Victoria on the communications manning issue.

An internal dispute between the board and the union worsened Wednes when the association announced police officers will no longer cover for civilian staff away due to illness or during lunch and coffee breaks.

Cameron said the dispute should be dealt with by the Labor Relations Board or by an arbitrator under the terms of an existing collective agreement, Cameron said.

"The matter is before the LRB as I understand it and that's the appropriate arena in my view.

"The matter is capable of being resolved in the framework of their collective agreement or under the labor code of B.C.," Cameron said.

Couvelier wrote the letter after all 40 police officers on duty walked off the job for an hour at 10 a.m. Wednesday.

The officers said they were protesting the police board's refusal to meet with them or appoint an arbitrator to settle several long-standing grievances.

The unresolved dispute between the police association and the police board creates a "serious danger to life, health and safety of the community . . ." Couvelier says in the letter.

Cameron said he hasn't studied the Saanich letter yet but is aware of the contents.

As of 7 a.m. Wednesday police officers stopped relieving civilian staff working in the communications centre.

Police association president Sgt. Phil Jamieson said the LRB ruled in March police officers are not required to supply officers to relieve communiciations personnel.

An officer on the communications desk means one less officer in the field, he said.

The police board has ordered the association to supply relief officers and Couvelier says the board will try to enforce the order.

Bank rate dips again

OTTAWA (CP) — The Bank of Canada rate dropped today to 11.29 per cent from 11.81 per cent last week, a sign that interest rates will again decline in Canada.

The new average interest paid on $680 million of 91-day treasury bills is 11.04 per cent, down from 11.56 per cent last week.

Chartered banks and other financial institutions are expected to follow the central bank's lead.

Blackout hits all of lower island

An equipment malfunction at B.C. Hydro's Arnott substation in Surrey caused the lights to go out all over lower Vancouver Island this morning.

The substation is the main Hydro link between the Mainland and Vancouver Island.

A spokesman said a separate circuit is out of service for maintenance so there was no standby circuit available when the main circuit went.

When there is a heavy loss of power on the grid, a Hydro spokesman explained, power is cut off on a "load-shed basis."

This means that larger electrical equipment such as grinders at pulp mills, some as far north as Crofton and Alberni, went out first.

The outage turned into a general blackout all over the lower Island, including parts of Nanaimo.

Dogfight for power on Japan PM's bier

Times News Services

TOKYO — With only 10 days to go before parliamentary elections, the death of Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira Wednesday set the stage for a fierce political power struggle.

The elections were called after the 70-year-old Ohira's surprise loss of a confidence vote in parliament on May 16, when 56 members of his own Liberal Democratic party abstained, giving the Socialist party opposition the victory.

Under Japanese law, Chief Cabinet Secretary Masayoshi Ito became acting prime minister. He will serve in a caretaker capacity until the new Diet, or parliament, is chosen in previously scheduled elections June 22. The new members of the two-house legislature will then choose a new prime minister.

Sending stocks plummeting on the Tokyo stock market, Ohira's death from a heart attack came as the Liberal Democrats, a conservative coalition that has dominated Japan's post-war politics, was torn by internal dissent with numerous party members eyeing Ohira's party leadership post.

The late prime minister will perhaps be remembered most as the man who engineered Japan's diplomatic reconciliation with China in 1972, which resulted in an economic boom for both countries.

He also was considered one of the best friends the United States had in Asia, and his death on the eve of the Big Seven summit of

Curb 'buy U.S.' laws: envoy

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. is inviting retaliation by failing to curb the growing number of states passing "buy American" laws that discriminate against Canadian-exported steel and other products, Peter Towe, the Canadian ambassador to Washington, warned Wednesday.

In an address prepared for delivery to a Pittsburgh audience, Towe said he is worried by a growth of protectionist pressures in both countries that he said will get worse if the economies slip deeper into recession.

Noting Pittsburgh's prominence as a steelmaking city, Towe also tried to head off threats by giant U.S. Steel Corp. to file dumping or countervailing duty actions against the Canadian steel industry that might result in heavy fines for the Canadians if convicted.

Any such action would be nothing more than "harassment and protectionism" aimed against Canada, the ambassador said.

"It would be especially galling for Canada because, while our steel firms have enjoyed success in the U.S. market, Canada-U.S. trade in steel and steel products is still massively in the United States' favor," he added before an audience of rotary club members and the World Affairs Council.

Towe expressed frustration about "buy American" legislation at the federal level and in effect, or soon to be in effect, in 16 states to establish a preference for U.S. steel products and impinge on Canadian steel exports.

Towe conceded there are also regulations in Canada, although not laws, that favor made-in-Canada goods in government procurement policies. But they are less restrictive than in the United States.

Citing government statistics, the ambassador said between 1976 and 1979, about 20 per cent of total purchases by Canadian federal and provincial governments were imports, mostly American goods. By contrast, less than 10 per cent of purchases by the six major U.S. federal agencies in charge of procurement is open to foreign suppliers, he said.

civic affairs

"Every time I go in there I feel like Alice." That's the comment of a reporter who regularly covers the regional board, but even some of the directors admit to the unreality of events as they unfold behind the looking glass every Wednesday afternoon at 524 Yates Street.

There was director Bob Wright, representing the city of Victoria, muttering: "I can't believe it."

That came after a strange vote following a two-hour debate on whether Salt Spring Island ought to be exempt from the transit tax, the special surcharge on electric bills to pay for buses.

After a tedious discussion which wandered all over the place, to West Vancouver and its municipal transit system, Gambier Island and the Islands Trust, which by itself would have justified a wonderland label, there was the farce of the vote itelf.

Directors voted 21-20 under their weighted system in favor of Salt Spring director Yvette Valcourt's motion to give Salt Spring Islanders freedom from the dreaded transit tax.

Close, but the majority rules, right? Not at the Capital Regional District. According to its special rules the vote lost because only six directors voted in favor, and nine were against.

To pass, the motion required both a majority of votes and a majority of directors. The rule is a safeguard in the Municipal Act designed to prevent domination by the few municipalities with most of the votes. (For example, Saanich and Victoria carry 28 votes under the weighted system, but have only six seats on the 18-member board).

It has had to be used only rarely. On paper it looks like a sensible precaution, although its application in this particular case had most ironic ramifications. It wasn't a case of preventing the two major members of the CRD from dictating to the smaller and less populated electoral areas. The Saanich and Victoria directors, with one exception, were in favor of the motion. They were happy to see Salt Spring go.

Wait for chapter 47 of Islanders in Wonderland, the saga of a people yearning to be free. The close vote only encouraged the separatists out there. We haven't seen the end yet.

It's a mite early, but some political people are already pondering the 1981 municipal election in Victoria. The voting is 18 months away — Victoria aldermen still aren't quite used to that long drought between elections since the city switched to biennial elections of the whole council.

Playing what-might-happen-if helps to fill the empty hole. The mayoral race generates the most speculation. Will Bill Tindall stay on for another term?

He's given no indications one way or the other. Tindall clearly loves the job he has now and he's good at all the ceremonial things which seem to take up much of a mayor's time. He'll be only 60 at the end of his first term.

He'd be almost unbeatable if he ran again. But he might face some opposition. If Tindall decides to step down after one term, Ald. Ron McKenzie would be encouraged to throw his hat in the ring.

Blencoe and McKenzie are ambitious for greater things than Victoria city council. McKenzie has been courting Social Credit assiduously; some see Blencoe as provincial timber for the New Democratic Party.

A term in the mayor's chair wouldn't hurt either man's chances. An alderman who sits, politically, between the two thinks Blencoe would clean up if McKenzie was the opposition but he'd lose against Tindall.

Whatever happens in the mayor's chair there may be even greater changes among the aldermen. More than half may not be around after the '81 election.

Bob Wright is undecided but probably leaning toward calling it quits after six years. He has no desire to be mayor. He's done almost everything he set out to do on council. It's time to slow down and enjoy life.

Frank Carson and Ken Sinclair may also decide the job is not worth the time and the effort. Bill McElroy is making noises about maybe getting out.

One oldtimer loved the job so much he wants back in. The joker in the pack — Murray Glazier — came third in a three-way race for mayor last fall, upsetting his eventual plans for federal office. The possibility of his return to council scares some people. He's been popping up at public gatherings all year and Glazier clearly wants his council seat back. A byelection would be nice, but if nothing turns up he'll be around on nomination day next year.

By AB KENT

Helen Caine is from a Jewish family, but even that did not prepare her for what her daughter said after school one day.

The girl's class had been talking about the holocaust, Hitler's genocidal solution to the Jewish question.

It was obvious the children knew little of one of history's most shameful horrors, the decimation of two-thirds of European Jews during the Second World War in a process that began in full sight of the world six years before the first shots were fired.

Caine said she realized social studies courses simply were not paying much attention to the subject. Perhaps her women's group could help.

Last October the Victoria chapter of Hadassah-WIZO (Women's International Zionist Organization) offered a Holocaust program and $100 for the best Holocaust essay written by a Victoria secondary school student; $75 for second prize.

This week the winners were announced — two girls whose writing demonstrates that conscience and shame and concern for humanity lives on, once the facts are exposed.

First prize went to Kate Sandilands, 15, of 2921 Seaview, a Grade 10 student at Arbutus Junior. Second was Susan Andrews, 16, of 3496 Henderson, Grade 11 at Mt. Douglas Senior.

Sandilands compared the climate of pre-war Germany with contemporary times:

"Are we not, in our world of the '80s, just as apt to only see what pleases us?

"For example, do we not tend to forget the poverty of those in Bangladesh and similar countries, the cruel oppression of the Cambodians and even the appalling conditions under which some of our fellow Canadians live?

"Do we not prefer to cast these images away as fiction to concentrate on our own more pleasant existence?

"To ignore what distresses us, will that not always be a human tendency?" the girl wrote.

Fellow winner Andrews noted the purge of Jews began in Germany years before the death camps were considered, scapegoats perhaps for the ills of that country.

"Why did six million Jews die?" she asked. "Because we, as the human race, let them."

Hadassah started its Holocaust program by informing delegates to the Greater Victoria Teachers' Association convention and seeking school board cooperation. Interested teachers asked for a program in their classes, including a guest speaker.

Although the contest had a relatively late start, some 35 students wrote essays.

"The approach of the committee was not to appeal to students on a purely emotional level, rather an intellectual one that seeks to understand the history, culture and psychology of the event," said Caine, who is president of Victoria Hadassah-WIZO.

She said it is difficult to assess the impact, but was encouraged by the high quality of the winning submissions.

"So much," she said, "depends upon the teachers."

Log clips wings of Princess

The jetfoil The Flying Princess broke a shearpin when it collided with a log Wednesday afternoon, forcing it to arrive in Seattle 40 minutes late.

The return trip to Victoria was cancelled and some passengers were flown up in chartered planes.

The jetfoil is back in service today.

When the underwater foil hits a large object, the shearpin breaks, being the weakest part of the device. It causes the foil to collapse, minimizing the shock of the collision.

The passenger part of the vehicle, which had been held above water by the submerged foil, settles onto the waves and the jetfoil proceeds like an ordinary boat. The speed became less than half the rate when the jetfoil is operating above the waves.

The engine was not damaged in any way.

The return trip to Victoria had been scheduled to leave Seattle at 4 p.m. It was the first cancellation due to accident.

Passengers who opted to go to Victoria aboard the Victoria Princess ferry at 6:30 p.m. were given a refund on the difference of the fares (the ferry is $15, the jetfoil $25) plus a free dinner aboard ship.

Boeing, which owns the jetfoil, repaired the shearpin overnight.

Get rid of perishables Safeway supplier told

Macdonald's Consolidated Ltd., which supplies groceries to B.C. Safeway stores, has been told to clear out its perishables by midnight Tuesday night following notice of strike preparation by the Retail Wholesale and Department Store Union.

Talks between management and the RWDSU, which represents about 825 warehouse workers in 88 stores in the Vancouver area, Victoria and Dawson Creek, stalled Tuesday but are expected to resume before next week's deadline.

Shelves in most Safeway stores will be empty about four days after the deadline and more than 5,000 workers will laid off if the dispute isn't resolved, a Safeway spokesman said.

Warehouse workers at Macdonalds, Lucerne Foods Ltd. and Empress Foods have been without a contract since March 31, 1980. They are now earning between $9 and $12 an hour.

At issue are wages, sick leave, shift premiums, welfare and pensions benefits and classification adjustments.

Meanwhile, the 10-day strike at Woodward's, continues, with pickets at the Victoria and Port Alberni stores. Strikers have withdrawn from the main distribution warehouse in Richmond, which supplies the company's 13 B.C. food floors.

Government mediator Ken Albertini has entered the dispute in an attempt to end the strike over union security and better wages and benefits.

Dropout site planned in elementary school

South Fairfield parents tonight will hear an administration proposal to turn Sir James Douglas School annex into a dropout recovery centre for older children.

District 61 superintendent Allan Stables is invited to attend a SJD parents' committee meeting at 7:30 on the school's second floor, said committee president Carol Doroshuk.

The two-room annex is one of the older brick structures on the property at Moss and Fairfield and its use lately has been by various community groups. At present it is rented by the YM-YWCA for pre-school classes.

Although it is "a lovely little building," space heaters make it unacceptable for regular school purposes, said SJD parents' past-president Miria Gordaneer.

She also said the school district proposal seems a definite one, even though a number of parents are concerned about the prospect of having elementary children mingling with what may by problem students from secondary levels.

"I think the only objection may be that we will have older students hanging around the school yard with younger ones, and will perhaps be an influence on them," Gordaneer said.

The proposal would be aimed at children in the 13-15 age bracket, potential dropouts or who have already left school for behavioral, academic or other reasons, drawing population from S.J. Willis, Central and two other junior secondary schools.

Another annex on the school grounds is also superfluous to SJD needs. This is a frame building on Fairfield now used by seniors in the community.

Body shops seek raises

British Columbia body shops have asked ICBC to return to the bargaining table to negotiate a 1980 rate for work done under the government-run insurance program.

ICBC awarded the shops a $2-an-hour increase to $25.60 in April but the Automotive Retailers Association says the April increase had been sought last year and the association views it as a 1979 increase.

Elderly help elderly with $20,000 grant

Helping the elderly to help each other is the intent of a recent grant from the federal New Horizons program.

The Seniors Serving Seniors group of Victoria has received $20,520 to establish a registry of services available on a mutual exchange basis.

Transit protest shot down

Despite a vote to the contrary, Salt Spring Islanders will continue to be in the Capital Regional District's transit area.

A two-hour debate Wednesday ended in directors voting 21-20 that the island be excluded, but a section of the Municipal Act states that a majority of regional directors is needed for a passing vote.

In Wednesday's vote six directors — holding 21 votes based on the population of the area they represent — voted in favor of the island being excluded but nine directors — fielding 20 votes — were opposed.

She said the islanders do not want a bus service and 1,200 people are refusing to pay their Hydro bills in protest.

Ken Arnott, a member of the Islands Trust transportation committee, said even if the service between Swartz Bay and downtown Victoria was improved, Salt Spring Islanders would be forced to use their cars because there is no parking area near the ferry terminal on the island.

Betty Pinchin, one of those who collected names for the petition, said island residents want no part of a bus service. She said a private operator had tried to put in a free service from the downtown Ganges area to the hospital and only two people had used it in three weeks.

Valcourt said protesters included the Islands Trust and the Salt Spring Water District. The water district, according to a letter, is a non-profit organization but each of its eight meters is charged at the $90 annual commercial rate.

It was suggested by Sidney mayor Norma Sealey, chairman of the transit planning and management committee, that Salt Spring be excluded from the transit area at the beginning of the next fiscal year but director Bill McElroy claimed this would mean the regional district would be charging for services it had no intention of implementing.

Directors did agree, however, that the provincial government, which has been asked to draft legislation to allow transit payments to be pro-rated to service provided to Port Renfrew and Jordan River, be asked to add Salt Spring Island to that request.

The adult care centre at the Oak Bay Lodge will have its official opening June 17.

Health Minister Rafe Mair will speak at the opening of the centre which will provide social activities and services for senior citizens who, for health reasons, are confined to their homes or whose families are unable to provide activities during the day.

Transportation to and from the centre will be provided.

The lodge houses 150 senior citizens receiving long term care and the day care centre will provide kitchen facilities, space for recreation, reading and conversation.

The program is designed for those seniors who may be able to remain independent with a little assistance.

Howie runs for 24-hour record

Howie — now without his familiar red beard — will try to break the existing world record of 161 miles, 500 yards run in 24 hours.

To get the official scrutiny required to challenge a world record Howie will run in the Labatts 24-Hour Relay in Vancouver.

While others taking part will belong to 10-member relay teams, Howie will run by himself over the three-mile course around Swangard Stadium.

The relay will begin at 10 a.m. June 21.

Howie says the competition with others in the relay should help him with his speed. He said he expects he can outrun many of the recreational relay teams in the race although the teams of serious runners will probably outdistance him.

Howie will seek pledges to contribute to the B.C. Lions Society for Cripple Children for this run, as with many of his runs. He hopes Labatts, the relay's sponsor, also will contribute.

Anyone wishing to pledge for the run can contact: Seawall Running Society, 1200 Hornby, Vancouver.

Canadian in thrilling escape after year as hostage in Iran

NORTH HATLEY, Que. (CP) — Canadian businessman Douglas Browning has escaped from Iran after a year of what he describes as "forced labor" for the revolutionary government of Ayatollah Khomeini.

Aided by sympathetic Europeans and Iranians, he gave his watchers the slip in Tehran and made his way to a southern port where one moonlit night he found himself desperately running down a beach past soldiers' guardhouses.

Browning, who returned quietly to this village 150 kilometres east of Montreal on May 26, was considered a commercial, not a political hostage, due to the bankruptcy of his former employers.

He had worked since 1974 for now-defunct Stadler-Hurter Ltd. on a $700-million paper mill development the Montreal firm was building for an Iranian government company on the Caspian Sea coast in northern Iran.

Stadler-Hurter, claiming it was owed $33 million by the Iranian government, declared bankruptcy early last year at almost the same time the former shah was overthrown.

Iranian officials clung to the letter of the contract, however, insisting that the Canadian firm maintain an official representative on the job site. As the last Stadler-Hurter employee in the country, Browning was refused an exit visa, placed under close surveillance and forced to work.

His escape was engineered by European businessmen, whose plans were tried and aborted three times because of unexpected countryside and gunboat patrols.

Browning was sitting on the bare floor of a house in Tehran when a call came.

"Cheer up, Doug," said the voice at the other end of the line. "We should finish our meetings in a week . . . we're ready to pack it all in."

"Everything was set. The only thing left for me to do was to lay a plan of deception so that I wouldn't be missed in Tehran while I travelled to the escape port on the Persian Gulf."

The next day, Browning was invited to dinner by a European businessman who handed him a forged Iranian identity card and several items of clothing that would identify him to other contacts.

The first contact called again, "inviting" him to go to the port the next day. "He didn't say which port, so the monitors must have thought this was my friend in Gilan calling. What he was telling me was to head to the Persian Gulf the following morning."

He bought an Iran Air ticket to the designated gulf port at a travel agency the next day, using his phoney ID and faking an accent. He boarded the flight with nothing but a flight bag, his Canadian passport and a 10-month old ticket to Europe.

At the port airport, he walked around the baggage pickup area for 15 minutes. No one contacted him, so he caught a taxi for the post office.

The man followed him at a few paces until they reached his car. They then drove together to a safe house on the gulf, where they spent the evening and most of the night.

"He told me that when it got dark enough, I would start my trek down the beach. I was to run along the hard sand near the water. If a patrol caught me I was either to give myself up or get shot. There was no returning to the safe house."

Browning donned a pair of black pants, a black jacket and a hood to cover his light hair, then tore up the fake ID card so it would not be traced to his friends. As he ran out the back door to the ocean, the contact created a diversion at the front of the house.

"I ran along the coast and just looked straight ahead. I knew there were guardhouses to the left of me, but I ran past them as though they didn't exist."

By morning he had landed in a Persian Gulf kingdom. But he still wasn't free.

Had he tried to leave the kingdom on an international flight, authorities would have noticed that his passport lacked an Iranian exit visa and they would probably have returned him to Iran.

At the airport he bought a ticket for a nearby gulf country. He then telephoned a Canadian external affairs official, asking him to contact the airline that had issued his ticket to Europe and arrange for an official to process the ticket in the international lounge of the airport at his next destination.

It remained to get out of the first airport without having his papers checked. Dashing past a flight counter, he flashed his ticket, hollering: "Hey Jack, would ya hold on."

Turning to the gawking officials, he yelled: "My buddy . . . he went that way . . . gotta go . . . OK?"

Browning disappeared into the crowd and boarded the plane without being followed. A few hours after landing, an airline official came to validate his ticket in the lounge.

Four days later, he arrived in Boston en route to Montreal. An immigration official took one look at his passport and "turned white."
